Schools Are Working
Marshall Field's Warning
Have You Read the Kloran?
Old Age's Worst Poisons

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Today the boys and girls really settle down to public school work. Yesterday they looked at the new boys and girls, arranged their working tools, became resigned to the inevitable. Today they are at work. Tens of millions of them are learning concentration without which all facilities go to waste.

They are learning that inside the mind only ability counts, not what your father owns. They are in the world's real school of democracy. They are the future power of this country and of the world. And their patient, ill-rewarded teachers are the creators and benefactors of a better future.

Marshall Field & Co. appeal to 25,000 retail merchants throughout the United States to defeat the American valuation plan of the new Fordney tariff bill. The words "American valuation" sound innocent, but are not. They involve a complete overturn of tariff and protection method, render useless years of valuation and taxation experience and threaten with confusion the real business of the country.

The idea of a tariff is to protect, first, labor; second, industry and commerce. The sound plan is to find the difference of labor and manufacturing cost between the foreign country and this country, then fix the tariff accordingly.

The tax, of course, must be based on the foreign VALUE. If it costs $10 in America and $5 abroad, tax accordingly, on a basis of FOREIGN VALUE.

Any other method would add to the consumer's cost, disorganize wholesale and retail distribution, and make bad times worse times. Any merchant or other citizen interested may get complete details, facts and figures by writing to Marshall Field & Co., Chicago.

The Ku Klux Klan, rising to explain, in New York city, in the person of a lady known as "Empress of the Invisible Empire," says the Klan is not anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic, as alleged. "It is," says the Empress, a Christian, Protestant organization, owing no allegiance to any foreign power, and the Catholic and Jew, under these conditions, automatically bar themselves."

That settles that. Jews and Catholics may go on living, but they can't be Ku Klux. It might be worse. Once in Christian countries Jews could not own land, practice medicine, sit in Parliament, hire Christian servants, bear any offices, or live where they chose. To be forever shut out from being a Ku Klux "Kleagle," whatever that bird may be, is mild punishment.

Ordinary men, that are nothing in particular but citizens, feel grateful to the Ku Klux for pleasant words invented, that take you back to real fairies. The Grand Cabin, dressed in white and scarlet, initiates you, administering the oath, without laughing. And the grand hook telling all about it is the "Kloran," which is fair enough, for Mohammed borrowed from everybody.

The altar of initiation is provided with an American flag, a Bible, bottle of water, fiery cross and a dagger. What could you add to that except a skull?

Uncle John Shell of Kentucky believes that he has just passed his 152d birthday. He says he was born in 1768, when Kentucky was part of Virginia. Now he is very feeling so well and sticks close to his home at Gressy Gulch, Leslie County. Mr. Shell is probably mistaken as to his age by several years.

There is no doubt that he is well over 100. There is also no doubt that, barring accidents, he will be a free 100th birthdays will be a frequent 200 years from now, as 100th birthdays are now. Old men tell you "how they did it," but they don't know. The thing is to avoid the worse poisons, which are worry, anger and haste.

A syndicate of Americans, including Frank Munsey, editor, and Sabin, financier, have gained control of the Hapsburg estates, transferred from the formerly royal family of Austria. It's an interesting financial adventure, sure to appeal to such a romantic nature as Munsey's. But the profits must be doubtful. What profits must be doubtful. What profits the Hapsburgs had they took, and when the Austrian republic takes back what the Hapsburgs took, the republic's title would seem to be as good as the Hapsburgs and Sabin fresher. With they'll have nice pictures, castles and jewelry.

Henry Arthur Jones, who writes dull plays well, turns from attacking Wells to attacking G. B. Shaw, whom he calls "criminal anarch." That will please Shaw, who will have as much fun with little Mr. Jones as any cat ever had with a mouse.

Mr. Jones is angry because Shaw predicts war between England and America. Why get angry? There have been two wars between England and America, and there is commercial war now—America financing England's end of it. It is not likely that any other direct war will come for a long time, if ever. But Shaw's predicting is not harmful. It makes men think, and wars usually come by surprise. Watched pots and discussed wars don't boil.

ARBUCKLE WITNESSES 'REACHED'

Prosecutor Charges Sinister Influences

N. Y. TO GET 'SLAVE MARKET'

'ZERO' WILL AID IDLE OF GOTHAM

St. Mark's Chapel to Be Used as Headquarters of the Campaign

Boston's "slave mart" has been moved from the Parkman Bandstand on the Common to a New York church, according to dispatches from that city today. Urbain J. Ledoux, the "Mysterious Mr. Zero," who announced that he had left Boston for a week's rest, arrived in New York today and announced he would open his "market" next Monday.

It will be located at St. Mark's Chapel, in East Tenth street, where Ledoux hopes to help obliterate New York's growing bread line by getting bidders for the service of men who can find no work.

The work of connecting the jobless man with the vacant position is proceeding merrily at the Church of the Unemployed this week, despite the absence of the leader.

Nearly forty men have been provided with work since Sunday, it was announced today by R. L. MacGregor, secretary of the organization. Many of these have been sent to work far out of town, to Connecticut and New York State. Others have secured employment in Boston.

Donations of money, including nearly $25o collected at the open-air concert Sunday, have amounted to over $400, which has been banked in the United States Trust Company. Food and second-hand clothing have been showered on the place. Due to the improved condition of the exchequer and the larder, the rations have been increased, so that two meals are now served daily in place of one.

ONLY U. S. SEAMEN TO SAIL AMERICAN SHIPS

A strict policy of employing only American seamen on American ships during the present shipping crisis has been formally adopted by the American Shipowners' Association, according to Captain Eugene E. O'Donnell of the shipping firm of C. H. Sprague & Son of Milk street. O'Donnell, who has been in Washington recently, of the United States Shipping Board, returned to Boston today.

OFFICER BEAUREGARD CHARGED WITH ASSAULT

Patrolman Ozias H. Beauregard of the Roxbury Crossing station was arrested today on a charge of criminal assault upon Mrs. John Kiresopoulos. He pleaded not guilty when arraigned in Roxbury Court and was held in $500 bail for hearing Sept. 21. Mrs. Kiresopoulos alleges she was assaulted on the Parker Hill Hospital grounds three weeks ago. She was then unmarried, but was in company with the man who is now her husband. She charges the policeman separated them before committing his assault.

COMMUTERS SEE MAN KILLED BY EXPRESS

Vincenzo Paglinca of No. 189 Cottage street, East Boston, was struck and fatally injured by an outbound Montreal express train near the Canal street railroad crossing in East Medford today. He died at the Massachusetts General Hospital.

Scores of commuters and laborers saw the accident. Paglinca, a laborer, became confused when he discovered the Montreal express bearing down upon him from one direction and an inbound Vermont train approaching from another.

BOSTON SCHOONER IN CRASH OFF CAPE COD

The four-masted schooner Jessa G. Ross, which sailed from this port for Norfolk last Sunday, put back today for repairs to her rudder which was smashed yesterday when the second of a tow of barges collided with her off Cape Cod. 'NEWSBOY' BEATEN ON COMMON

Police Seek Assailant of Armand Gaudreau, Victim of Mysterious Attack

Armand T. Gaudreau, who created a sensation here a few weeks ago by standing on the street corners to sell papers attired in the cap and gown in which he had graduated from the University of Maine, is confined to his home in Lewiston, Me., the victim of a mysterious assault on Boston Common a little over a week ago.

Gaudreau, who is partly deaf, is in an extremely nervous condition as the result of the attack which was committed late at night a week ago Sunday as he was crossing the open space on his way home.

The assault came so suddenly and without warning that Gaudreau does not yet know who struck him. Nor can any motive for the attack be discovered. None of his money was taken from him, but his gold watch and over a dollar in change were not removed from his pockets.

MADE GOOD ON JOB.

L. R. Rowe, vice-president of the American Bankers' Corporation, No. 125 Washington street, attracted by the publicity which had been given the young man's case, offered him a position on the force of salesmen who are selling the corporation's capital stock. This was four weeks ago. Gaudreau accepted, and, according to Rowe, made a very successful start.

On the Sunday night in question, according to the story told by the young man to his employer and to police, he had been to a dinner party, and was returning shortly before midnight. Meeting a sailor by chance at the entrance to the Park street subway station, he said, he walked leisurely across the Common.

"Then came the assault. Gaudreau is able to remember nothing of the events that followed.

"The only thing I can remember is that all of a sudden everything went black," he is reported to have told his friends. "The next thing I knew I was lying in a bed in City Hospital. How I got there I do not know. Nor do I know who attacked me, nor why it was done. I had no enemies here that I know of."

Gaudreau was confined to the hospital for four days. At last he was discharged. He returned at once to resume his work at the American Bankers' Corporation.

MAY HAVE BEEN SANDBAGGED.

"He seemed dazed, and walked as if he were dizzy," said Vice-President Rowe. "He wasn't able to hear at all out of his left ear. He would stagger around the office like a drunken man. So finally I told him to take two weeks off and go to his home and rest up."

The police report injects another

GIRL FACES ARREST ON PERJURY CHARGE

District Attorney Brady Accuses Zey Pryron of Changing Her Testimony of Fatal Party

San Francisco, Sept. 13.—Roscoe C. ("Fatty") Arbuckle's refusal to testify before the Grand Jury, charges by District Attorney Matthew Brady that State witnesses had been "reached" and the taking of new testimony surpassing in sensationalism all that had gone before marked today's developments in the prosecution of Arbuckle on the charge of the murder of beautiful Virginia Rappe, motion picture actress.

These principal developments, in the order of their importance, were as follows:

1—Mrs. Bambine Maude Delmont repeats before the grand jury the story of how Arbuckle dragged Miss Rappe into his room; how he locked the door, and kept it locked, despite the girl's appeals; and how, after an hour, he threw it back, to disclose the actress, dishevelled, partly disrobed and half dead upon the bed.

2—Mrs. Jean Jamerson tells the grand jury of the dramatic manner in which Miss Rappe, almost with her dying breath, accused the fat Falstaff of the movies and cried out for vengeance.

3—Miss Betty Campbell, showgirl and new witness, declares the story to Miss Rappe did not halt the Arbuckle revel, which continued with increasing roughness long after she had been served.

4—Arbuckle, awakened in the small hours, refuses to testify, on the advice of counsel.

5—District Attorney Brady says one State witness has disappeared and another absconded but changed her story, due to "whisper influences," and hints that some witnesses may be arrested to protect them from such influences.

6—Arbuckle begins to show the outward signs of the strain he has been under. He is pale, nervous and worn as he is taken back to "Pelon's Row."

WELLS PLEADS NOT GUILTY IN DUAL SLAYING

Charles A. Wells of Dedham, whose real name is said to be Katan, was arraigned in Superior Criminal Court today on a charge of murder in the first degree, in having shot and killed his divorced wife, Eleanor Anna Wells, and A. Louis Altmeyer, her lawyer.

Although somewhat confused, he finally succeeded in pleading not guilty, and Attorney Percy A. Katzman was assigned as his counsel. No date was set for trial.

Wells was asked by Judge John F. Brown if he had any money. "No, that's why I'm here," he replied.

It is charged Wells shot and killed Mrs. Wells and Altmeyer on a crowded street car at Grove and Washington streets, West Roxbury. Mrs. Wells had obtained a divorce decree which became absolute on August 7 last, and had further moved to dispossess him of a house she claimed. Brooding over these matters drove him to the double murder, police believe.

CHARGES WITNESSES IN ARBUCKLE CASE WERE TAMPERED WITH

ONE OF GIRLS WHO ATTENDED 'PARTY' HAS FLED CITY

Arbuckle, tired from a day of unusual strain, during which he had undergone all of the routine criminal procedure from arrest to arraignment, went to sleep early last night and at 1 o'clock this morning was aroused with difficulty from a sound slumber to appear before the Grand Jury.

Dressing hastily, he was taken by detectives directly from the jail to the Grand Jury room.

Perspiration poured from his forehead as he answered in a low tone when asked by the foreman of the Grand Jury to give his version of the St. Francis party.

"My attorneys have advised me to say nothing at this time," he said.

The district attorney and his attaches were excluded from the Grand Jury room and that body settled down to consider the testimony. For nearly an hour they talked over the case behind closed doors. Then Foreman Clifford Curtis emerged and announced:

"SINISTER INFLUENCE."

"It was thought best not to take a vote on an indictment tonight. We considered it best to give District Attorney Brady more time in which to obtain certain information which we desire. We did not set a date for return.

"Fay King, S. E. Kiser, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Fr. C. B." and other writers of the Order of Stardom are regular contributors to the Boston Daily Advertiser. sumption of the Grand Jury investigation."

It was following this significant statement from Foreman Curtis regarding "certain information" desired by that body that District Attorney Brady made his charge of witness tampering.

"We have sent Miss Zey Prevon home under surveillance. "She girl changed her story completely before the grand jury. Whether or not we shall arrest her and charge her with perjury will depend on further developments.

HARD TO CONVICT WEALTHY.

"I am convinced that undue influence and pressure of a sinister character has been brought to bear on her and other witnesses, one of whom, Alice Blake, has mysteriously disappeared from her home in Berkeley. We have been unable to find her.

"In spite of these efforts to thwart the ends of justice the investigation will proceed and no effort will be spared to bring the guilty ones to their just deserts.

"Whenever wealth and influence are brought to the bar of justice every sinister and corrupt practice is used in an effort to free the accused. It is always easy to convict a poor man. The wealthy malefactors are the ones who find means of using their wealth to advantage. Wealth and influence should not count in favor of a defendant; rather should they count against him."

Nine witnesses were heard by the Grand Jury during its long session. Mrs. Bambino Maude Delmont, who has assumed the role of prosecutrix, first told her story of the party and the events that followed it.

She is understood to have related in detail the story she had already given to the police. In this she declared Arbuckle dragged Miss Rappe into his room and locked the door; that she remained there an hour despite her urging that the door be opened; that when the door finally was opened, Miss Rappe lay moaning on the bed, disheveled and in a semi-conscious condition.

Mrs. Jean Jameson repeated, it was said, her statement that the girl in almost her last words accused Arbuckle of being responsible for her condition. Mrs. Jameson, it is understood, pointed out that the girl's statements had been conflicting in that at times she declared she did not remember what happened.

It was reported an investigation was underway to determine the source of a ticket to Alabama alleged to have been found in the Fryson girl's possession.

Mrs. Delmont was to be the chief witness at the inquest which authorities were unable to complete yesterday. Early today it was declared that Mrs. Delmont might not be able to testify because of her almost hysterical condition.

After swearing to the formal complaint against Arbuckle she suffered a collapse and it was reported that her nervous condition today was unfavorable.

TO TELL OF "PARTY."

Completion of the inquest and indictment of Arbuckle by the Grand Jury were expected to be the chief developments in the case today.

Mrs. Delmont was expected to tell the coroner's jury her version of the fatal party at the St. Francis Hotel, where Miss Rappe is alleged to have been assaulted by the fat film comedian, sustaining injuries that resulted in her death four days later.

Mrs. Delmont was a member of the party and helped to care for Miss Rappe after she became ill.

Five physicians were the chief witnesses at the coroner's inquest—Dr. M. E. Rumwell, Dr. William Opaulo, Dr. J. Reed, Dr. Emmet Rexford and Dr. Olaf Klarkon, coroner's physician, one time of another attended Miss Rappe during her last illness.

"FATTY" SHOWS STRAIN.

Much of the testimony given by the physicians was of an unprintable nature. The line of questioning followed by officials dealt chiefly with the nature of the injuries that caused Miss Rappe's death, with particular stress on the possibility of the injuries being of spontaneous origin.

Harry Boyle, assistant manager of the St. Francis Hotel, testified to finding Arbuckle carrying the body of Miss Rappe from his suite into another room. The actor, Boyle said, was wearing a dressing gown over his pajamas and Miss Rappe was nude to the waist.

Boyle said he took Miss Rappe from Arbuckle's arms at the film comedian's request and carried her into another room.

That the injury to Miss Rappe in no wise dampened "Fatty" Arbuckle's good spirits, but that the party at the St. Francis continued with increasing roughness until supper was served and Arbuckle departed for a local theatre, was revealed by Miss Betty Campbell, show girl, one of the hilarito unrevealed guests at the weird affair of a week ago.

A ROUGH AFFAIR.

"It was a rough affair, all right," said Miss Campbell. "If I hadn't been quick and in the possession of my senses, the same thing would have happened to me that happened to Miss Rappe. Only it was not Arbuckle who tried it—he conducted himself like a gentleman while I was there, except for being dressed in pajamas and dressing gown.

"I danced with Arbuckle during the afternoon. He had considerable liquor in him, but was not intoxicated. He did little except dance, make clownish remarks, and sit shrugging his shoulders in that funny way of his.

"I'm not going to take any blame for anything that happened to that girl," Fatty" declared during supper time.

SAW NOTHING OF VICTIM.

"I didn't arrive at Mr. Arbuckle's rooms until after 4 o'clock, so I saw nothing of Virginia Rappe," said Miss Campbell. "Earlier comers, however, told me about her being in the room with Arbuckle, and of how she had been taken violently ill and had been given a cold bath to quiet her."

Miss Campbell went to the party with her friend Dolly Clark, also a show girl, at the invitation of Alice Blake, singer at Tait's. Three months ago she was named as corespondent, in the divorce suit of Mrs. Guy H. Lewis of Chicago against her husband, young millionaire son of the Chicago beer king.

Lehrman Forgives Girl, as She Was Lonesome

By International News Service.

New York, Sept. 13.—"I know Miss Virginia Rappe's going to 'Fatty' Arbuckle's apartment in the St. Francis Hotel because she was in a strange town and lonesome," said Henry Lehrman, fiance of the dead woman, in commenting further today about the tragedy.

Miss Rappe was escorted by Mrs. Bambine Delmont, who has stated Virginia did not know Arbuckle was to be in the apartment when they were invited to call," said Lehrman. "Even if she had known Arbuckle was to be present I would have excused her going. For despite her physical aversion to him he could have been entertaining."

Lehrman said he was undecided whether he would go to California. He said his friends had advised him against going, so he was not certain today whether he would attend the funeral of Miss Rappe, which he has arranged at Los Angeles.

Lehrman, though grief stricken, is still bitter against Arbuckle, whom he thought was his friend.

'Fatty's' Sister Tells of Comedian's Kindness

By Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Calif., Sept. 13.—Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle's only sister, Mrs. Nora Arbuckle St. John, mother of Al St. John, also a motion picture actor, today said her brother "had taken care of himself since he was fourteen years old and never asked the help of his relatives, but since he had made his fortune he had always been generous to his own people."

"He had done many kind things for me and my family," she said, "and for our brother at Fresno.

"I know my brother too well to believe he would do anything criminal or ungentlemanly to a woman. He has the kindest, tenderest heart in the world."

LAYS TRAGEDY OF MISS RAPPE TO PROHIBITION

Noted Alienist Says Conditions Today Aid the Desire to Do the Forbidden Thing

By WINIFRED VAN DUZER,
Universal Service Correspondent.

New York, Sept. 13—"What is said to have happened in Rosco Arbuckle's apartment in San Francisco Monday is not unusual.

"That sort of thing is going on all over the country. But it happens more frequently now that prohibition has imposed peculiar restrictions on the public.

"The difference between the affair which took the life of the Rappe girl and those hundreds of others is that the others stop short of death."

This astonishing statement was made by Dr. Menas S. Gregory, famous alienist and head of the Psychopathic Department at Bellevue Hospital.

I asked Dr. Gregory about "Jay" psychology: why it is set with the mark of the beast and if it is more brutal now because bred by a compound article, usually under cover.

Why would a man, a part of the country's social structure, product of all its traditions, do as Arbuckle is said to have done, when under the influence of alcohol?

He explained what the most deadly of easily obtained drugs does to the brain.

"Man is the elemental creature under a veneer of civilization; law and order are necessary to curb instincts of the individual for the good of the community. Law would not be necessary for man living upon a mountain top.

"But impulses to do the forbidden thing sacrificed so people may live together is repressed. It is not killed.

"Alcohol short-circuits restraint. It frees the beast under the veneer.

"His spontaneous action then will be the one of the animal that he is, whether they be murder, mutilation, snashing."

Dr. Gregory commented upon the reason for such orgies as the one at the St. Francis in a country where prohibition is presumed to rule. He said it was the old story of the child that will be "good" for a time, but who surely would revert to the lawless instinct.

Conditions in this country, he indicated, are the outgrowth of human instinct to do the forbidden thing. He added:

"Through prohibition we have got rid of the saloon and some other places where alcoholic drinks were sold.

"But drinking now is being done in a manner more harmful than the old way. It's effect is more pernicious more destructive and farther reaching."

Much of the drinking, he said, is done at gay parties in private homes, or in hotel suites, not only on Broadway but also on Fifth Avenue, and in every city in the country. Such orgies as never were known in even the wildest of the wild days of old are taking place night after night.

He added:

"Prohibition cannot be enforced here or anywhere unless the people psychologically are ready for it and prepared to treat it properly."

Girl's Foster-Mother Cries for Punishment

By Universal Service.

Los Angeles, Calif., Sept. 13.—"I want to see this monster punished—this beast who took the life of my great little girl."

Hordering on collapse, seemingly, and with difficulty restraining tears, Mrs. Joseph Hardebeck, of No. 7—North Wilton place, cried for vengeance on the life of Virginia Rappe.

Ever since the death Friday last in San Francisco of the film beauty, following the orgy in the hotel apartments of "Fatty" Arbuckle, Mrs. Hardebeck has been on the verge of hysterics, it was revealed.

Mrs. Hardebeck said that ever since Virginia Rappe was twenty years old she had cherished and looked after the girl as her own, although no blood tie existed.

"Arbuckle never figured in my little girl's life, except in the most casual way, business and professional way. He never called on her, never took her out and never before this terrible affair attentions upon her. He may have waited five years to 'get her,' as he is reported to have said. But if he did, his waiting was unknown to Virginia.

"I must not be a judge, but I can only feel that this man is guilty and must be punished with all the punishment the law provides for such a shameful deed."

CASEY OF GRIDIRON FAME TO WED WINTHROP GIRL

E. L. CASEY AND ANNA CUSICK

They will be married in a Winthrop church tomorrow. Casey played half-back on the Harvard varsity eleven. He graduated in 1919.

FORMER HARVARD FOOTBALL STAR TO WED

Football and social circles will be interested in the wedding tomorrow of Edward Lawrence Casey, Harvard football star of a few years ago, and Miss Anna Louise Cusick, the youngest of the three daughters of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Cusick, of No. 26 Sagamore avenue, Winthrop.

The wedding, which comes as a surprise to many of the friends of the young couple, will take place quietly in a church at Winthrop.

Casey was graduated from Harvard in 1919. He is twenty-seven years of age and is the son of Joseph Casey of No. 97 East street, Natick. He received his early football training in Natick. After graduating from Phillips Exeter Academy he entered Harvard, where his line play attracted much attention and later he played halfback. In 1919 he was a candidate for captain, but withdrew at the last moment in favor of Billy Murray.

The acquaintanceship of the young people began in the Spring of 1919, when they attended a class dinner at the Copley-Plaza. It was a case of mutual attraction from the first.

Miss Cusick was graduated from the Winthrop High School and is a pianist and singer of considerable ability. Her father is the head of the firm of A. C. Lombard & Sons, steamship brokers, of State street, and well known in shipping circles.

element of mystery into the occurrence. According to the report, as examined by Rowe, the young man was found lying in a ditch near the on Elliot street, a short distance from Pisopoulos restaurant. Police are equally at a loss as to the identity of the assailant.

At the hospital it was said he had been struck on the left side of the head with a blunt instrument, apparently a sandbag or a blackjack. It is feared that his hearing may be permanently impaired. Since he returned to his home last week his employer, Mr. Rowe, has received no word from him as to his condition.

Gaudreau came to Boston early in August, unable to find work. After trying in vain to land a job of some sort he donned his college cap and gown, got a pedlar's license and went on the streets in the downtown section to sell papers.

The unique figure he presented seemed to him much attention. Vice President Rowe, walking along the street one day, was interested in the young man's appearance, he says, and handed him his card with the injunction to "drop around and see me."

Gaudreau complied on the following day, and was at once put to work as a salesman. With several other men he was sent down on the Cape for a few days. It was shortly after returning from this trip that he was attacked.

Mr. Rowe declared that the young college graduate was "making good" at the time he was injured.

"I was very much encouraged at the progress he was making," he said. "His position will be held open for him here until he recovers."

During the war Gaudreau enlisted in the navy, and was promoted to the rank of lieutenant, serving overseas. His Lewiston, Me., address is No. 195 Ash street.

GRILL BURDETT ON PLEAS FOR 'PREMIUMS'

Attwill and Stone Query Arguments to Revive Plan Legislature Refused

Branding his argument as inconsistent and his statements as inaccurate, Chairman Henry C. Attwill and Commissioner Everett N. Fuller of the State Department of Public Utilities today submitted Everett W. Burnett to a severe grilling when he attempted to renew the scheme of the gas and electric corporations to capitalize $20,000,000 of premiums.

Burdett, appearing before the department, asked Chairman Attwill and the others to recommend that the Legislature pass the $20,000,000 premiums bill, the $100,000,000 capitalization-of-assets bill and other measures in the gigantic scheme rejected by the Legislature at its last session.

After explaining that the premium is the difference between the par value of the stock and the price for which the stock was actually sold, Burdett said the corporations ought be allowed to issue $30,000,000 of stock, the amount of the premiums, and distribute it among the stockholders, "to remedy the unfairness."

"If one tries to do a thing to remedy an 'unfairness,'" said Chairman Attwill, "your bill provides that the stock shall be distributed among all the shareholders. The man who paid $160 a share isn't going to get any more of this stock than the man who paid $140 a share."

"Well, it may not have been a correct statement, exactly," Burdett admitted.

"You have been arguing here for the passage of a law to permit the companies to issue stock below par," said Commissioner Stone. "Wouldn't that continue the 'injustice' of which you complain?"

"Yes," interjected Chairman Attwill. "You struck me as being inconsistent when you were making the argument."

ARBUCKLE TRAGEDY CONTAINS MORE THRILLS THAN ANY FILM

DRAMA OF STUDIOS REVEALED IN COMEDIAN'S CAREER

Fate has staged a play without a hero in San Francisco; a tragedy without a single heroic incident, but more thrilling by far than anything theatrical or film producer ever dared to stage on boards or screen.

Roscoe Conkling (Fatty) Arbuckle is the leading character. Around him and the beautiful Virginia Rappe, known far and wide as "the most lovely woman in the moving picture world," revolve the details of this tragedy.

Just a few years ago Fatty Arbuckle was an unconsidered "extra" man on a studio lot. A few years before that he was washing glasses, cleaning cuspidors, sweeping floors in a third-rate saloon on the Barbary Coast in San Francisco.

Then the moving picture "game" caught him up. Higher and higher it swung him until last year he paid an income tax on $250,000, and his income this year would have been far larger.

Last week he was one of the great ones of the Film World. Today he is seated in a prison cell waiting trial charged with having committed one of the most brutal murders in the lurid annals of the city by the Golden Gate.

Two weeks ago the girl, Virginia Rappe, was making her plans to marry an Eastern picture producer. Today she is lying ready for burial in a little plot of ground in Los Angeles.

These things constitute a drama of real life, the more thrilling, compelling, gripping in interest than anything ever staged in the world of make-believe.

Read the story of "Fatty" and Virginia.

Drops Mop for Filmdom

ACT. I.

SCENE I.—The front room of a saloon in the heart of old San Francisco's famous "Barbary coast." Before the long, highly polished "steam beer bar" stands a group of men, throwing dice for drinks. In a rear room little groups of men and women are standing around tables where gambling games are going on. A mind's eye is making strange notes in a corner. "Fatty" Arbuckle enters, carrying a bucket and a mop, and begins cleaning up the place, swabbing out cuspidors, sweeping the floor, washing glasses. While he is working the crowd at the bar jibes at him for his size and unwieldiness. He takes the chaff good naturedly, and watches his chance to steal a handful of food from the lunch counter while the bar tenders are not looking. The curtain drops as he succeeds. Curtain.

INTRODUCTION TO FILMS.

SCENE II. The auditorium of a "Grand Opera" house in a small Western town. Orchestra and gallery contain a scattering of men and women. The curtain on the tiny stage rises. "Fatty" Arbuckle with the "golden smile" working overtime, bounds into view. The crowd yells. He dances clumsily and the crowd yells some more. Then he sings in a high pitched, cracked voice, and again the crowd roars. Curtain.

SCENE III. A studio "lot." A gang of extra men and women are taking instructions from an assistant director, who barks at them as if they were stray dogs. "Fatty" comes in through a nearby gate, his appearance starting a general air of amusement and contempt. He needs a shave and his hair needs cutting. His clothing is shabby and his shoes on the verge of dissolution. He is "down and out."

SCENE IV. A banquet hall in one of Boston's most exclusive hotels, the occasion opening off the apartment, are to be seen professional men, world famous moving picture producers, prominent attorneys, business men, possessors of millions. They are gathered to do honor to "Fatty" Arbuckle, hero of a hundred pie battles, laugh-maker for scores of millions of human beings. Fatty, accompanied by his wife and her mother, enters the anteroom. There is a shout from the crowd. The company moved to the banquet hall, where, under the brilliant lights shining upon the glittering cut glass and polished silver, "Fatty" is placed in the seat of honor.

The curtain falls on the scene and the end of the FIRST ACT, as the guest of honor marries away with his wife to catch the train for New York, where a big contract awaits his signature, and the other guests adjourn to Mishawum Manor in Woburn, for a "frolic of the night" with "Brownie" Kennedy's entertainers.

Girls at Arbuckle Hall

ACT II.

SCENE I. The Arbuckle "Hall," in the most exclusive section of the famous moving picture colony outside of Los Angeles. "Fatty" is discovered in a purple silk, heavily embroidered dressing gown over silk pajamas, seated in a huge leather chair in the "library" of the house. Outside the French windows is the sunken garden that landscape gardeners have arranged for him. He is reading a moving picture magazine, chuckling at some of the things it contains about himself. On a table at his side is a decanter and a syphon. An ebony table, inlaid with arabesques of ivory, a little farther off, is almost covered with "mash notes." A butler enters and murmurs something. "Fatty" shakes his head. The butler persists. "Fatty" nods, and the servant walks out to reappear a moment later with, in a little old woman, shabby, and evidently sick. She is Mrs. William G. Arbuckle, "Fatty's" stepmother, who brought him up. "Fatty's" "million-dollar smile" disappears at sight of her. He listens to her appeal for help, but shakes his head. She turns to go, but he calls her back and gives her some bills and silver. She exits. Curtain.

"FATTY" ENTERTAINS.

SCENE II. The sunken gardens outside the Arbuckle Hall. Well dressed men saw wood with the "million-dollar of the stage and the film about them are gathered about the little marble tables scattered over the velvet lawn. Servants are moving about bearing drinks. "Fatty" in the centre of the scene telling a remarkable pretty woman that his wife has just decided to get a divorce, and that he will not fight the suit, but would pay her "handsomely to keep away from here."

Enter Henry Lehrman, accompanied by Virginia Rappe. "Fatty" Chaplin lights up at the sight of them, and he hurries across the grass to the side of the beautiful girl. During the "party" that follows he is assiduous in his attentions to her despite the ill concealed jealousy of Lerhman, the promised husband.

"Golden Smile" Revived

SCENE III.—The library of the hall. Virginia Rappe and Fatty are standing beside the ebony table talking earnestly. He is urging her to something and she is steadfastly refusing. Lehrman walks in briskly and the girl's face and posture relax as she rushes forward and clasps his arms with both hands. Fatty scowls for a moment, then the "golden smile" comes back and he turns and pours out drinks for all three. The girl shakes her head, but Lehrman takes his. Curtain.

SPURNS ADVANCES.

SCENE IV.—A room in a celebrated road house on the Santa Monica ranch, north of Los Angeles. At a table in the centre is Fatty. Before him is a large silver saliver containing a cut-glass decanter, a number of glasses and a syphon and a bowl of ice.

The door opens and Miss Rappe, who in the days when she was a traveling artist's model was known as "one of the most beautifully dressed women in America, comes in. She is gowned in evening clothes and is wearing, flung over one white shoulder, an exquisite blue silk wrap, lined with ermine. The snow-white fur brings out vividly the pale rose tints of her skin and sets off the dark coloring of her lips.

Fatty smiles and lifts from the table a huge bunch of American beauty roses. Then he motions toward the decanter. She returns his smile and nods to his question. He pours out two highballs and they drink. As she sips here Fatty leans forward and whispers something in her ear. Her face hardens, the smile disappears. She places the unfinished glass on the table as she shakes her head. Fatty pleads, but she is firm and as he persists she turns from him and walks hurriedly out of the room.

The moving picture actor forgets himself and his face breaks into a scowl. Curtain.

Tragedy Follows Gin

ACT III.

SCENE I. An apartment on the third floor of the famous St. Francis Hotel, overlooking Union square, in San Francisco, one of the busiest spots in the whole of these United States. There are three beautifully furnished rooms, the outer of which is used as a reception room. This opens into a bath room, which in turn opens into one of the bed rooms.

Between two large bay windows is a long lounge. Seated on this is Miss Rappe. Beside her, and fondling her hand from time to time, is Fatty. On a small sofa across the room is Mrs. Delmonte and Miss Alice Blake, both of Los Angeles and both friends of Miss Rappe. In chairs in other parts of the reception room are Al Semnacher, Virginia's manager; Miss Zey Pyvron, an actress and show girl, Lowell Sherman and a short fat gentleman, who played no part in what followed:

In the centre of the room is a table with a couple of bottles of gin and several of ginger ale standing beside a large tray of sandwiches and other food. The crowd is laughing and talking, ignoring the host, Fatty, who is talking earnestly to Virginia.

Startled by Girl's Cry

By and by, without replying to his last remarks, Virginia rises and walks to the open door of the bath room. As she goes she lays one hand on the shoulder of Mrs. Delmonte, and says:

"Let's get out of this. It's getting too noisy."

Then she disappears. A moment or two later "Fatty" is seen to leave his place on the lounge and walk through the door of the other connecting room. Mrs. Delmonte and Miss Blake both hear the lock click as he shuts the door after him.

For a time the noise and laughter goes uninterruptedly onward. Then a cry from behind the locked door startles the crowd. Lowell Sherman jumps from his chair and runs to the door. Behind him, already alarmed, is Mrs. Delmonte. She pounds on the door with her fists and cries to be let in.

Then comes a scream of agony. It stirs Mrs. Delmonte to a fury of apprehension. Later she told the police she had known for years that "Fatty" had been "chasing" Virginia Rappe.

"Open that door or I'll telephone the hotel management," she screamed through to Fatty.

A moment later he appeared. His face was stark white and covered with sweat. His silken pajamas were rumpled and creased, and there was cold fear gleaming in his eyes.

"Get her out of this," exclaims Fatty. "She makes too much noise."

CRIES FOR AID.

SCENE II.—A typical bedroom of the ultra modern luxurious hotel. On the heavy brass bed lies the figure of Virginia Rappe, stripped of clothing. On the floor and a chair are the tattered remnants of the things she had been wearing when her friends had seen her leave the reception room. The shirtwaist had been rent into long ragged strips. Even her stockings had been torn, and her flimsy underwear was scattered about the room in shreds.

As the guests of Fatty Arbuckle crowded through the door she screams to them:

"I am dying. I am dying. Save me from him."

Frantically they set to work. Mrs. Delmonte administers hot water and bicarbonate of soda, believing that the food and liquor had set up acute indigestion which was causing the intense suffering of which the girl complained. But the soda fails to work.

Sherman Lowell suggests a cold plunge. It is made ready in the big bathtub and the two women lift the girl and place her in the cold water. She quivers convulsively as the chill strikes her flesh, and appears to be on the verge of a collapse."

Mrs. Delmonte runs for the house surgeon. He comes, declares the girl is dying and orders her to another room.

VIRGINIA'S DEATH.

SCENE III.—A private room in a San Francisco hospital. The white-capped nurse, Mrs. Jean Jameson, is sitting beside the white bed upon which lies the form of Miss Virginia. The patient is swathed in bandages. The smell of antiseptics and disinfectants is everywhere.

"Don't let Harry know about this. It would kill him," whispers the girl on the bed, and the nurse nods assurance. (Harry is Lehrman.)

"Are you going to get that man Arbuckle," murmurs the girl after a minute. "He did this. He ought to be made to suffer for it."

Again the nurse nods. There is silence. The clock outside strikes 1 o'clock. It is nearing that hour in the night which all nurses dread for their patients: the zero hour of life. From the bed comes a faint murmur. The nurse bends forward to catch what is being said. There is a flutter of the hands on the coverlet, a sigh from the lips no longer red. Virginia Rappe, once called "the most beautiful woman in the movies," is dead.

Dazed by Death Charge

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Police headquarters in San Francisco. Chief O'Brien is sitting facing Fatty Arbuckle, who is standing beside his lawyer. Around them are grouped a number of detectives and police officials. District Attorney U'Ren enters. He whispers to the Chief. The two men walked slowly across the room of talking. The chief turns and waves his hand. A detective steps forward, lays the tips of his fingers on Fatty's shoulder and says:

"You are under arrest charged with the murder of the moving picture actress, Virginia Rappe."

SCENE II. A cell in the San Francisco city Bastile. "Fatty" is to be seen through the grating in the door, sitting on the side of his bed—a bed so narrow it can hardly contain his great bulk. A messenger comes to him. He reached out his hand and his fingers close on a telegram. For a moment he fears to open it. Then ripping off the cover he reads that the wife with whom he was "unable to get along," the wife he had demanded and obtained a separation from him, is going to hurry across the country to be with him when the time of his trial comes.

He looks long and steadfastly through the bars that shut him away from the great world. Then slowly he places the telegram in the pocket of his coat.

Curtain.

LIFE INSURANCE MONOPOLY IS ADMITTED

Told at State House Hearing by Cox in Reply to Elwell

Because of stringent financial requirements imposed by State laws, organization of any new life insurance company is impossible, and those now doing business have a monopoly, Guy W. Cox, attorney for numerous companies, said at today's hearing before the Special Commission on Insurance.

Cox's statement admitting the existence of the monopoly by existing companies was made in reply to Fred S. Elwell, the Boston insurance expert.

Cox, for the old-line companies, had asked that the "preliminary term" system life insurance policies be permitted in this State. That system permits the companies to use a larger part of the first premium for expenses.

Elwell declared it would give opportunity for promoters to organize new companies and to loot them without the knowledge of the policy holders.

"After a short fishing trip to Georges Bank," he said, "we shall fit for the elimination races against the Elizabeth Haywood, a New York schooner. These will take place oc Cape Ann in October to decide which schooner will defend the cup against the Canadian challenger this year off Halifax, October 22, 23 and 24." The Mayflower brought in 240,000 pounds of salt fish, worth approximately $10,000.

MAYOR WARY OF TALKING ABOUT CANDIDATES

Discusses Coming Fight With Reporters but Evades Showing Any Preference

Time, today. Scene, office of Mayor Peters. Cast of characters: the mayor and reporters. Purpose, daily rehearsal of the "news" of City hall.

Reporter—"Who is your candidate for mayor, your honor?"

Mayor—"Well, I have not decided yet."

Reporter—"You have been credited by a newspaper with having a preference. How about it?"

Mayor—"Yes, I see I have been given a preference. I'll try to convince myself as to the best man at the right time."

Reporter—"Will you support the right man, that is the right man in your opinion, by taking the stump for him?"

Mayor—"Well we will have to see about that later."

Reporter—"Some of those mentioned have seen you about being candidates, haven't they?"

Mayor—"Yes, I think several of those mentioned have talked over the situation with me."

Reporter—"Has you institutions commissioner, Thomas C. O'Brien, conferred with you about resigning and running for Mayor?"

Mayor—"While several have talked with me about running for Mayor, no one as yet has talked with me about resigning a good job to do it."

Reporter—"Who do you think will be elected?"

Mayor—"See you later about that."

Mayor Peters said he would ask the corporation counsel for an opinion on the legality of the order passed by the City Council yesterday for the revocation of all licenses granted to pawnbrokers for the sale of firearms. He intimated that he did not think it was legal.

He refused to comment on the refusal of the council to pass his order for the appointment of a commission to study the auditing system of the city.

GIVEN 30 DAYS FOR ROW WITH MOTHER-IN-LAW

Pasquale Manduro, fifty-four years old of No. 285 Watertown street, Newton, speaks very little English, and his mother-in-law, Mrs. Margaret McKenzie, who is Scotch, is deaf. For this reason, according to the police, Pasquale and his mother-in-law started to war on fairly even terms, until he ended the argument by using force to eject the women from his house. In Newton court today he declared through an interpreter that he was guiltless and that he also needed a divorce. He got thirty days in the house of correction.

ALLEGED SOUTH END SLAYER CAUGHT

Paul Pappas, Accused in Murder of Mrs. Arsenault, Arrested in Montreal

Paul Dascalakis, better known as Paul Pappas, is under arrest in Montreal, charged with the brutal murder of Mrs. Alice Arsenault, whose partly dismembered body was found May 11, 1920, buried under five feet of ashes in the cellar of the lodging house at No. 517 Columbus avenue, which she had conducted up to the time of her disappearance on Christmas Day, 1919.

The arrest of Pappas, whom the police allege sold the lodging house following Mrs. Arsenault's disappearance, comes after following a year and a half international search.

First authentic information of Pappas' hiding place was received September 9 by Chief Inspector John E. McGarr of the Boston police from Chief Inspector William J. Quilty of Springfield. Quilty said he knew a Dominion immigration agent at Montreal that knew the whereabouts of Pappas.

The Montreal police were notified and, accompanied by the Dominion agent and Pinkerton detectives, finally located Pappas, who, the police declare, has admitted his identity. Extradition papers will be applied for today in Montreal.

EDISON EXCESS CHARGES HELD ILLEGAL

Corporation Counsel Hill's Report Confirms Claims of Boston American

Corporation Counsel Arthur D. Hill rendered a report to the City Council upholding the claims of the city of Boston against the Edison Electric Illuminating Company for excess charges in the lighting of city property as being illegal.

The city law department has joined with the Boston American, through Grenville S. Macfarland, counsel for the Boston American, for an investigation of the charges made by the Edison company to the city and the citizens of Boston.

The 10 per cent. additional charge on bills and the additional charge under the so-called coal clause imposed by the Edison company are illegal and not fairly and correctly applied by the company, in the opinion of the corporation counsel.

Large sums, it is said, have been collected from the city under these illegal charges for lighting school houses and other municipal buildings.

"As to the future," he reports to the Council, "the matter can be satisfactorily dealt with through the State Department of Public Utilities, but for payments made in the past that department has no legal authority to order repayment. I have, therefore, brought an action on behalf of the city against the Edison company to recover the amount which, in my judgment, has been illegally collected."

Assistant Corporation Counsel Joseph P. Lyons rendered an opinion requested by the Council on the legality of giving away the refreshment privileges at Franklin Park and the Headhouse to the Woman's Educational and Industrial League.

He found that the city has no right under the law to give away such privileges or concessions without reasonable consideration to the city. But as to the amount of the reasonable consideration, that may be definitely determined by the park department and the Mayor and, "if the party to whom the concession is granted binds himself to do certain things which would inure to substantial benefit to the city," then, Mr. Lyons believes, the court would uphold the deal.

GREAT DEBT DUE U.S. FACTOR FOR PARLEY

Tariff Second American Weapon to Force Cut in Armaments

By International News Service.

Washington, Sept. 13.—When the great powers of the world gather around the conference table here next November to discuss reduction of armament and measures to eliminate discord in the Far East, two all-powerful weapons will be in the hands of the American "big four" to lend driving force to American arguments.

One of these is the $11,000,000,000 debt which the participating nations owe to the United States.

The other is the contemplated American tariff wall which, if necessary, can be erected so high that it will keep away from American shores the products of nearly every country in the world.

Every nation participating in the conference, with the exception of Japan, is hugely indebted to the United States for money obtained during the war. Thus, if some of the nations object to a limitation of armament, the United States could with perfect decorum suggest that, if the objectors have sufficient national resources to keep on arming, they certainly have enough resources to take up long overdue obligations. Great Britain, with the greatest navy in the world, owes the United States approximately $7,000,000,000.

RED HOT BATTLE TO FILL SEAT OF LUFKIN

Both Pingree and Andrew Claim G. O. P. Nomination in Essex Today

The primary elections in the Sixth Congressional District to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of W. W. Lufkin to become collector of the Port of Boston, opened today with Colonel A. Piatt Andrew of Gloucester and Ramson C. Pingree of Haverhill equally confident of winning the Republican nomination.

Other Republican candidates for the party's nomination are Harris M. Durham of Hamilton and former Mayor Leslie K. Morse of Haverhill.

Judge Charles L. Pettingell of Amesbury is unopposed in his race for the Democratic nomination, and the Democratic leaders are preparing to make desperate fight for the vacancy, counting on the effects of the hot fight in the Republican ranks to aid their man.

Early indications bore out the predictions made during the primary campaign, that either Pingree or Andrew would walk away with the G. O. P. nomination. Morse, of course, will have more or less strength in his home town of Haverhill, but Durham is regarded as certain to prove "an also ran" in the race when it is over.

The close of the campaign came in a blaze of red fire and heated political air. Andrew talked to a crowd of several thousand at Gloucester and Pingree made a dozen addresses, one in every ward in Salem.

FUND FOR CUNEO FAMILY GOES OVER $24,000

Committee Accepts Offer of Old Colony Trust Company to Administer Fund

The Boston American Cuneo Fund today passed the $24,000 mark in spite of the fact that the committee announced the official closing of the fund last Friday. Receipts Monday aggregated $352.76, bringing the total to $24,022.28.

The Boston City Council passed an order recommended by Mayor Peters, giving $1,000 outright to the family of Patrolman Andrew B. Cuneo. This was done under Section 87, Chapter 31 of the General Laws. The appropriation will be divided equally between the widow and nine children, giving them each $100 in cash forthwith.

A majority of the members of the Cuneo Fund Committee held a meeting Monday at the office of Police Commissioner Edwin U. Curtis, who presided.

A. C. Ratshesky, president of the United States Trust Company, announced that the Old Colony Trust Company had offered to take charge of the Cuneo Fund and do all the work free of charge. It was unanimously voted to make the Old Colony Trust Company custodian of the fund under a deed of trust which will be drawn immediately.

SUB-COMMITTEE NAMED.

Commissioner Curtis appointed a sub-committee to consult with the Old Colony Trust Company, arrange all deails relative to the creation of a trust fund and to report to the full committee at a later meeting. The sub-committee consists of Mr. Ratshesky, former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald and Allen R. Frederick, of the firm of Pierce & Frederick and also of the Beacon Distributing Company.

In appointing the committee Commissioner Curtis made the following suggestions relative to the disposition of the Boston American Cuneo Fund:

1—That the mortgage on the house owned by Mrs. Cuneo at No. 46 Everdean street, Neponset, be paid off.

2—That the Old Colony Trust Company take over the remainder of the fund in a trust, pay the income to the widow while she remains unmarried, and, on her death support the children, having special regard for the minor children; the whole of the fund to be divided among the surviving children when the youngest child becomes twenty-one years of age.

MEMBERS AT MEETING.

The members of the committee who attended the meeting were Police Commissioner Curtis, former Mayor Fitzgerald, Allen R. Frederick, A. C. Ratshesky, Andrew A. Badaracco, John A. Scanga, Vincent Brogna and Mr. Downs, who represented Galen L. Stone of the firm of Hayden Stone & Company, bankers. Frank W. Stearns of R. H. Stearns & Company, Joseph H. O'Neil, president of the Federal Trust Company, and Charles A. Pastene of the Boston Chamber of Commerce were unavoidably absent. Robert C. McCabe, managing editor of the Boston American was represented by the Cuneo Fund editor.

Mr. Fitzgerald eulogized Police Commissioner Curtis and the police department for their aid in raising the Boston American Fund. He said:

"This meeting should not close without an expression of thanks on the part of the committee to the members of the Boston police force for their very generous donation and for the personal assistance rendered by Police Commissioner Curtis.

"The commissioner has devoted much time and energy to this cause. His door has been open at all times to members of the committee. The committee feels that the city of Boston is to be congratulated for having a police commissioner who is not only efficient but who has a big heart."

BOSTON AMERICAN PRAISED.

Mr. Ratshesky said:

"The committee and the public at large are deeply indebted to the Boston American for the great public service it has rendered in raising a fund for the family of a heroic policeman, who died in the performance of his duty. The management of the Boston American are to be commended for their enterprise and public spirit."

Donations yesterday included a check for $100, donated by Horatio G. Curtis of No. 50 State street. Employes of the Liberty Marble Company, Inc., Baldwin and Granite streets, South Boston, contributed $47.50. The employes of David H. Fenner, gent's furnishings, No. 29 School street and Nos. 595 Washington street, subscribed $32.

Inverness, Scotland, Sept. 13.—The Sinn Fein couriers bearin Eamon De Valera's reply to the British Cabinet's Irish peace conference note arrived here today. The Sinn Fein note was immediately placed in the hands of Premier Lloyd George, who had previously been notified that it was on the way.

Dublin, Sept. 13.—Premier Lloyd George's proposed conference is expected to open at Inverness on September 21, according to opinion advanced by Sinn Fein leaders here today. The British Cabinet's note of last Wednesday had suggested September 20 as the date for the opening of the parley.

Eamon De Valera's note, which is now in the hands of Premier Lloyd George, probably will be made public here at noon tomorrow.

The Sinn Fein has already begun to make preparations for the conference. The Irish delegates are expected to leave Dublin on Monday, arriving in Inverness the following day.

TRIO GRILLED IN CHURCH AUTO MURDER PLOT

Two Are Arrested as Accomplices in Double Slaying at Chicago

Chicago, Sept. 13.—Swift solution of the gruesome double murder mystery that cost the lives of Bernard J. Daugherty and Carl Ausmus, automobile salesman, was expected today to follow the arrest of two men as alleged accomplices of Harvey W. Church, who already has confessed to the murder. Detectives believe all details of the crime will be known within a very short time.

One of the men arrested, Leon Parks, night manager of a garage, has confessed, the police say, to participation in the slaying. Clarence "Bud" Wilder, the third man under arrest, has been named by both Church and Parks as an accomplice. Police were endeavoring to learn today whether Church or Parks was the instigator of the murder.

Parks charged Church was prime mover in all the grisly tragedy, while Church has denied performing any of the deeds that formed a part of the consummation of the murder plot.

Parks, confronted in the State's attorney's office by Church, declared Church cut the throat of Daugherty and choked Ausmus after he and Wilder had aided in subduing them.

Parks said the motive for the slaying was to steal the automobile which Daugherty and Ausmus brought to the Church home in the belief Church would fulfill his agreement to purchase it.

HEADLIGHTS PHOTOS TO MAKE LAW PLAIN

Photographs of the new approved automobile headlights have been prepared in the offices of the State Highway Commission, and will shortly be distributed to police throughout the State to show them exactly what is required of motorists by the new law.

"The Star Spangled Banner" Written 107 Years Ago Today

One hundred and seven years ago today, amid the thunderous roar of an intensive bombardment, when the fortunes of this country were at low ebb, the national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner," was born.

It was written "by the dawn's early light," by Francis Scott Key, on a vessel in the harbor, during the British bombardment of Fort McHenry in the War of 1812.

"Oh, say, does that Star Spangled Banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?"

HELD ON CHARGE OF FRAUD IN STOCK DEAL

Arrest in Waltham Convinces Police That Gang Is Working New England

Waltham police toda, following the arrest and appearance in court of Philip Smith, 21 years old, on charges of larceny, believed they had uncovered the existence of a group of bogus stock salesmen, who, the say, have extended their activities throughout New England.

Smith's arrest came after Philip Bellevue, who operates a store on Charles street, Waltham, became suspicious of a proposition offered to him by an alleged agent for the Tropical Rubber Company, in which concern Bellevue owns 70 shares of stock.

The man who gave his name as Browne, offered to sell Bellevue's stock for him at a big profit. Bellevue agreed, and was told the prospective purchaser would buy the stock only in blocks of 100 shares. Accordingly, Bellevue said, Browne urged him to give him $195 with which to buy 39 more shares and raise Bellevue's allotment to the required 100 shares.

Bellevue, who had already turned over the stock he owned, consented. Later, however, he grew suspicious. He was to have met Browne today to give him the money, and when he went to the meeting place he took Police Officer Peter Tracey with him. Smith appeared, saying he had been sent by Browne, and was arrested. He is held for appearance a week from today in $2,000 bail.

According to police, the same plans has been worked frequently in New England recently.

'MECCA' SWEEPS AUDIENCE OFF ITS FEET

Gigantic Spectacle at the Opera House a Gorgeous Arabian Night

By FRED J. McISAAC, Dramatic Editor.

If you saw "Mecca" last night and you live to be a hundred, you will not forget the "Mecca" ballet, and the unearthly and undraped beauty of Martha Lorber, the dancer.

The big audience at the Boston Opera House was swept completely off its feet alike by the loveliness and the audacity of the Fokine bacchanals at the finish of the second act.

Imagine, if you can, the vast stage crowded with leaping male and female figures, beautiful faces, dazzling limbs, exquisite draperies and the most superb lighting effects.

Through the throng flashes a snow-white figure, with blonde hair streaming to her knees, her body untrammelled save by the most elementary coverings. As the weird music increases in intensity, in passion, in fury and in intoxication, Martha Lorber darts through a wild and amazing dance, while all about her the bacchantes and the satyrs mingle in a mad revel. It all works up to a climax which leaves both dancers and audience exhausted with excitement.

This ballet represents the most artistic work of Michel Fokine, master of the Russian ballet. Its beauty, its fascination and its sublime imagination makes it a classic and preserves it from cheapness or vulgarity, despite the extraordinary lack of coverings for the human form divine.

A GREAT SPECTACLE.

"Mecca" is, without exception, the greatest spectacle ever staged in this country or elsewhere. It was written by Oscar Asche, author of "Chu Chin Chow," and was staged by E. Lyal Swete. It was produced at the Century Theatre in New York last season and was recognized then as the last word in stage productions.

The big ballet occurs naturally during the progress of the story. To the genius of Fokine was added the prodigality of Morris Gest. Never in Europe did Fokine find it possible to have a free hand. In "Mecca" the treatment of the ballet with lighting and costuming represents a gigantic expenditure, but the results are unspeakably gorgeous.

In Lionel Braham, Gest found for the leading role in "Mecca" a man who fitted the part both physically and dramatically. Braham is nearly seven feet tall. His voice is the biggest in the world. When he roars and bellows he is liable to break windows.

And in "Mecca" he plays a strong man, a wrestler, a bully and a braggard, a remarkable figure withal, and a great deal of skill.

SORT OF ARABIAN NIGHT.

The story of "Mecca" is a sort of Arabian Night. The Sultan of Kapsa falls in love with the strong man's daughter. At the moment when he is about to make her his bride, the strong man, unknowing the honor about to befall his daughter, attempts to kill the sultan in a wrestling bout to which the sultan has invited him.

The Sultan is also a fine figure of a man. El-tor Glyn declared he was the perfect man, and certainly Orville Caine is tall, well built and handsome, and the costumes of "Mecca" fit his figure, you may be sure. It seems that a wicked cousin of the Sultan desires his throne and he has fooled our strong friend into believing that his majesty "intends wrong by little Nell," Ammurud, as they say in Arabian.

His Majesty pardons the wrestler, but orders him to make the pilgrimage to Mecca. Hence the title of the play. The Mecca caravan is raided, however, by the rebel prince and little Nell is quickly kidnaped and placed in the villain's power. Nell is played by Hanna Toback, an extremely graceful and pretty girl with a beautiful soprano voice, which nervousness caused her to force off the pitch considerably last night.

ORPHEUM THEATRE—Patrons of the theatrical and sporting world extended enthusiastic greeting yesterday to Frank Cavanagh, Vincent Mallonna and George Wiley, champion bicycle riders, who appear in a presentation and novel act at the Orpheum Theatre. The act was enthusiastically received by large audiences.

Fresh From Paris

Latest Word From Marie Suzanne

PARIS, France.

THE season of heavy coats swoops upon us without warning—the season when charming fragile things must be cloaked in equally charming things less fragile. And every woman is glad of a markedly furry Winter because soft pelt ries do so much to soften that otherwise staunch look that is the heritage of the cloth coat. Bands of skunk are used to trim an interesting model in wine red broadcloth, shown at the Paris openings, which is indicative of the smartest line for Winter coats. The low waistline is denoted by a strip of embroidery in self color, and the coat fastens with very little effort, there being but one button, and that applied at the waist-line.

ANOTHER coat, which assumes cape-like proportions toward the bottom, employs dark brown kolinsky in all customary places and adds thin strips of it in unexpected ones. The deep collar is lined with the hunter's green perlaine of which the coat is made, and may be adjusted according to the weather.

REVERE BEACH—The continued good weather has induced thousands of people to flock to the sea shore and as a result the amusements at Revere Beach, New England's well-known playground, will remain open Saturdays and Sundays until Columbus Day, October 12. Revere Beach has attracted new record crowds for this season.

BOSTON THEATRE—Dustin Farnum, in a big Western picture, "The Primal Law," is the photoplay feature at the Boston Theatre this week. The Leightons, authors of "Casey Jones" and other song hits, head the vaudeville.

CRITERION THEATRE — Wallace Reid, in "Too Much Speed," is the principal feature at the Criterion Theatre, Roxbury Crossing, for the first half of the week.

"TOWN GOSSIP" SNAPPY AND TUNEFUL

Johnny Dooley and Lillian Fitzgerald Contribute to Fun at Colonial

Ned Wayburn's new musical comedy, "Town Gossip," opened for a short run at the Colonial Theatre last night. Essentially a girl and music show for the well-known Tired Business Man it departs from the usual style of Wayburn revue and boasts of a plot. The plot, though obscure, still keeps a little thread of a story running through the four scenes of the two acts.

Throughout the entire piece it is easy to detect a strong note of propaganda against the anti-tobacco reformers and the advocates of "Blue Sundays," in fact the entire show seems to be dedicated to the one purpose of getting over as many lines on those two subjects as possible.

The two main stars of the production are Johnny Dooley, late of Ziegfeld fame, and Lillian Fitzgerald, the Boston comedienne, last seen in this city with Ed Wynn's Carnival. Dooley is as full of pep and jazz as ever and as a correspondents course Detective he got many laughs.

Miss Fitzgerald gave many of her popular imitations and introduced a few new ones. The piece contains several tuneful songs, the only flaw being that they are worked too much throughout the two acts. One number especially, "Just Like the Sunshine," has a catchy air and was put over in a pretty manner, but lost some of its effectiveness by frequent repetition.

COMEDY HEADS THE BILL AT KEITH'S

Harry Carroll and his company in "Varieties of 1921," a sparkling one-act comedy, heads a pleasing bill at Keith's Theatre this week. The Bennett Sisters, songsters and dancers, accompanied by Harry Laughlin, won the applause of the audience.

Grace Fisher and "six slick chicks" completed the company of one of the best one-act comedies that Boston has seen this season. "Smiling Harry Carroll" in his inimitable style made the audience rock with laughter.

The Dare Brothers, acrobats, open the bill. They are followed by Brennan and Rule, well-known song writers, singing their own songs and introducing their latest compositions.

Stephens and Hollister, in "Back to Beverly Hills," present a pleasing comedy of one act. Nella Webb, musical star, appears in an act quite distinctive, and is assisted by Jean La Farge.

Bill Robinson, "The Dark Cloud of Joy," delighted the audience with songs and dances of the South. The other two acts also good. They are Joe Roiley and company in "At Palm Beach," and Reynolds Donedan company, in a repertoire of dances and skating feats. There are also the usual screen cartoons and "Topics of the Day."

SCOLLAY SQUARE OLYMPIA—Drawing on the cosmopolitanism of Singapore and the charm of Spanish romance for a background of striking allure, and a gripping story of father-love and Chinese vengeance dramatic suspense, Thomas H. Ince has attained in "The Cup of Life," his latest production for the Associated Producers, which is now playing at Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia Theatre, a degree of photodramatic perfection which has scarcely been equalled in his entire career.

SOMERVILLE THEATRE — Two capacity audiences yesterday witnessed and enjoyed the first New England presentation of Willard Mack's sensational crook play, "Smooth as Silk," presented by the Somerville Players. The performance was given with remarkable skill each member of the company distinguishing himself or herself in the interpretation of their respective characters. Arthur Howard appeared as Silk Sullivan, a gentleman thief, while Enid Markey, as the heroine, displayed additional evidence of her remarkable versatility.

"THE OLD NEST" IS FINE FILM AT THE PARK

The long heralded Goldwyn production, "The Old Nest," is taken from the Rupert Hughes story and adapted to the screen by Mr. Hughes himself. "The Old Nest" is much like "Over the Hill" in treatment, except that while the mother in "Over the Hill" spends unhappy months visiting her children after they are grown up and have homes of their own, the mother in "The Old Nest" sits home grieving and lonely.

Mary Alden has done a truly remarkable piece of work as the mother, Mrs. Anthon. She plays with force and understanding. She is not too pathetic, nor too pronounced in her grief, but plays with restraint. Her make-up, while not as spectacular as the changes of Mary Carr in "Over the Hill," is well carried out. Miss Alden has a magnetic personality which "gets over" well on the screen.

Mr. Hughes has written a story of human interest that is well sustained, well woven, and full of homely incidents that make the production especially effective.

The cast is necessarily a large one since the children grow up during the five reels. Helene Chadwick, Molly Malone and Cullen Landis stand out particularly for their portrayals. But it is the work of Mary Alden and Rupert Hughes that "make" the film. Mr. Hughes has conceived a great character, and Miss Alden has given it life.

GORDON'S OLD SOUTH AND OLYMPIA—In "The Sign on the Door," Norma Talmadge, incomparable emotional actress of the silent drama, is seen at her best in the most interesting and absorbing screen vehicle yet given to this talented star. "The Sign on the Door" opened to a capacity house at Gordon's Old South and Olympia Theatres last night. It is a screen version of Channing Pollock's highly successful stage play of the same name and a splendid plot is well presented.

WALDRON'S CASINO—A delightful concoction of music, mirth and melody, blended together in a laugh-provoking revue, is "Peek-a-Boo," the burlesque sensation that opened at Waldron's yesterday. It was given a splendid reception by two large audiences, and it is easily comparable in the excellence of the company, the costumes, music and settings to the latest musical comedies playing at the city's largest theatres.

Coming Events

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE—Helen Hayes, the youngest of theatre stars, who made so deep an impression as comedienne and actress in such successes as "Clarence" and "Bob," will come to the Hollis Street Theatre for a three weeks' engagement, beginning next Monday, in a new comedy by Booth Tarkington, entitled "The Wren."

PLYMOUTH THEATRE—For the first time in America, although the play is more than ten years old, Arthur Hopkins will present "The Claw," Henri Bernstein's "La Griffe," at the Plymouth Theatre next Monday evening, with Lionel Barrymore as the star.

WILBUR THEATRE—"The Whirl of New York," the latest New York Winter Garden attraction to visit Boston, will open its local engagement at the Wilbur Theatre next Monday night.

Gentlemen:

I have been requested by Miss Mary Pickford to express her deep regret that owing to multitudinous prior engagements made for her before her arrival in Boston, and the inclement weather and the fact that her physician insisted on her conserving her health, she was quite unable to take advantage of your kind invitation to visit your well known establishment.

Most sincerely she hopes that at some future date she will find herself with more time.

STOCK COMPANY APPEARS IN 'CLARENCE'

Tarkington Comedy at the St. James Is Given Fine Performance by Cast

"Clarence" captivated a big audience at the St. James Theatre last night. Booth Tarkington's comedy on American family life scored a tremendous success as presented by the versatile players of the Boston Stock Company.

If you want to have a good laugh and forget all about unsettled business conditions, take in "Clarence." It has rich lines of clean comedy, splendid satire and even elements of mystery.

GILBERT SCORES HIT.

Maybe you will say "that's just how ma acts," or "look at Johnnie," etc., as you watch the cast take off the family life as brought out in the show.

Walter Gilbert takes the title role. And he does it very well. He makes his audience laugh until it literally holds onto its sides. This clever actor also proves that he can be serious when his part calls for him to be so.

Leona Powers does very well as the governess. She gets into many unique situations which always bring forth a hearty laugh from the audience. Viola Roach appeared as Mrs. Wheeler, Ethel Milholland as Cora, the daughter; Mark Kent as Mr. Wheeler, while the rest of the stock company cast assisted.

ROLLICKING SHOW.

The show is fast and rollicking. It is also acted better than most shows which means that it will play to big houses this week. As it is only here for this week, theatregoers will do well to make their plans early.

The Boston Stock Company, which Director W. C. Masson has assembled, is gaining in popularity every day. It is one of the best stock companies to ever show in this city and its success at the St. James Theatre is assured.

Plays That Remain

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE—Grace LaRue and Hale Hamilton in "Dear Me," the comedy with songs, entered the final week of their engagement at the Hollis Street Theatre last evening.

TREMONT THEATRE—Mitzi, the captivating little prima donna comedienne of "Lady Billy," the musical romance that has been called the most sparkling vehicle of her career, began the second week of her engagement at the Tremont Theatre last evening.

GLOBE THEATRE—"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," Metro's tremendous visualization of Blasco Ibanez' widely read novel, last night began the twentieth week of its engagement at the Globe Theatre. This picture is one of the mighty spectacles of the day.

TREMONT TEMPLE—"Over the Hill," William Fox's photoplay of tense human appeal, yesterday began the third week of its Boston engagement at the Tremont Temple. "Over the Hill" is a picture that will unquestionably live long in the memory of those who view it. It has been made from the famous poems written by Will Carleton, "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse" and "Over the Hill from the Poorhouse."

SHUBERT THEATRE—Frank Tinney, in Arthur Hammerstein's musical comedy, "Tickle Me," has started the season most auspiciously at the Shubert Theatre. This piece, which is now in its second week, is easily a rousing success.

CENTRAL SQUARE, CAMBRIDGE—Elsie Ferguson's latest Paramount picture, "Footlights," which was the feature yesterday at Gordon's Central Square Cambridge Theatre, is a story of the stage and has an unusually vital theme. The plot deals with a young country girl who is ambitious to become an actress and who later impersonates a Russian actress, by which she wins fame.

GORDON'S STRAND—Absorbingly interesting from the opening scene to the final "clinch" a with a climax that brought thaudience half out of their seats is "Da Oath," the R. A. Walsh produton featuring Miriam Cooper, whicopened at Gordon's Strand Theatre yesterday, for a run three days.

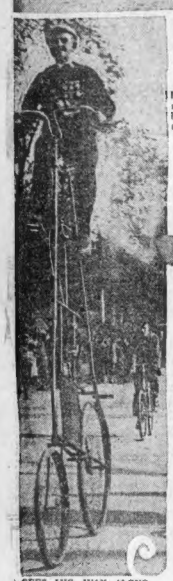
TANKS INVADE LONDON SHOOTING BEER INSTEAD OF BULLETS

HAVE A LITTLE TRACTOR IN YOUR BOATHOUSE—First it draws the boat over the sands to the water, then reverses and pushes it in. Shown here launching a lifeboat. Very handy in case you get stranded by one of those quick tides. (K.)

NOT MUCH WATER NEEDED! The camels and motor trucks that carry the Greek forces in their invasion of Asia Minor don't drink much. Good things on the deserts. (Int.)

THEY WEAR 'EM IN NIPPON—One-piece suits. This is the real yellow peril, some of Tokio's future beauties at the municipal swimming class. Future doesn't go for instructress, seated in front. No censors, there, either. (U. & U.)

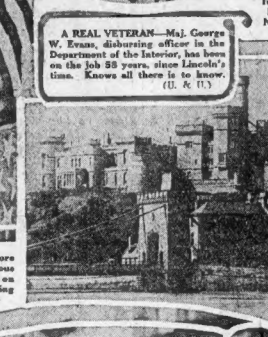


SEES HIS WAY ALONG—This bird can look over the traffic and pick out his spots. He went through Central Park without a spill on his private elevated.

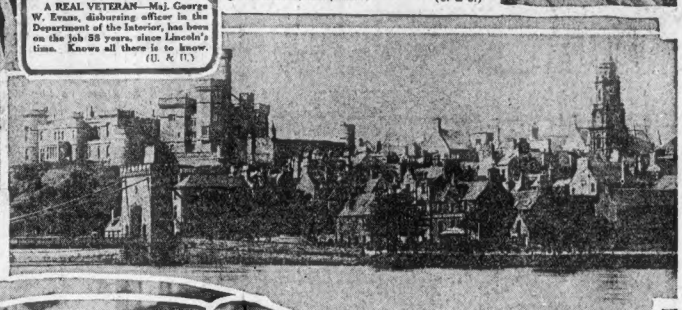
One of those medals he wears was pinned on for the stunt. He's supposed to be the world's best trick bicycle performer. Would have been here in old days. They wore 'em higher, then. (U. & U.

IS SHE? New York's prettiest girl? This is another view of the famous smile of Miss Virginia Lee, declared by the large town's best artists to be the most perfect specimen they have gazed on. And they gaze on them, too.

TEDDY ALL OVER AGAIN! Young Theodore Roosevelt is getting to look more like his famous daddy every day. Also has the famous punch on the platform. Made good in the war and making good as Assistant Secretary of Navy. (Int.)



A REAL VETERAN—Maj. George W. Evans, disbursing officer in the Department of the Interior, has been on the job 58 years, since Lincoln's time. Knows all there is to know. (U. & U.)

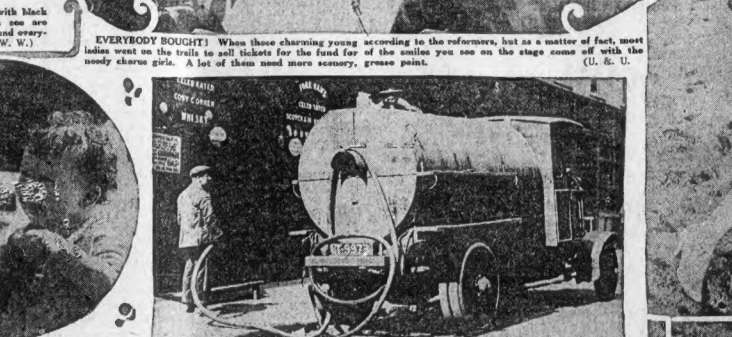


SEAT OF PEACE PARLEY—Famous Inverness Castle in Scotland, where Lloyd George and his cabinet will meet De Valera and the Irish delegates to try to settle the future of the Emerald Isle. Never in history have prospects seemed so bright for a truce between the ancient enemies of the British Isles. (Int.)

PROTECTED, NOT PINCHED—The women police in the London parks capture stray children, not criminals. May be future ones, but that's neither here nor there. The skirted Bobbies act as nurse maids while the mothers do their shopping, and maybe a bit of gadding. Use candy rather than clubs for weapons. (K.)

VERY, VERY DEMURE—This afternoon walking dress is of henna crepe de chine, with tan crepe de chine side panels.

Said panels are trimmed with black cabochons, which you can see are very effective and attractive and everything. (W. W.)



EVERYBODY BOUGHT! When those charming young according to the reformers, but as a matter of fact, most ladies went on the trails to sell tickets for the fund for of the smiles you see on the stage come off with the needy chorus girls. A lot of them need more scenery, grease paint. (U. & U.

PAIR OF SWELL BABIES——The little chap is William Sing, aged 13 months, who won the prize baby contest at the Duchess County Fair. Miss Ruth McKechnie is holding. Some youngsters have all the luck. (W. W.)

MAKE MINE THE SAME! This isn't paradise, just London. Short of kegs over there, so they bring beer to the pubs in tanks. Then the beer brings the tanks to the pubs. Howdja like to have a beer run into the cellar? How the tank business would pick up if we could do that over here. Might use the water wagon. (K.)

WATERPROOF ROUGE, NO DOUBT—Otherwise Laurel Lindsay would hardly be using it. Laurel really escorts that abbreviated outfit into the ocean now and then. She won a prize in the Venice, Cal., bathing suit parade, and she had plenty of competition, with all the other movie stars entered. (W. W.)

Missing Boy Is Sought by Parents in South Boston

Has anyone seen nine-year-old Peter Fiter?

Peter, the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Fiter of No. 43 Woodward street, South Boston, disappeared from his home September 8.

The parents are greatly worried, and today enlisted the aid of the Boston American to locate their wandering son. They have visited all their relatives and friends, but found no trace of the boy.

Peter left home wearing a white blouse, brown knickers, brown cap, and was in his bare feet. He has light hair and blue eyes. He left home once before, but returned after a few days.

STEERE ESTATE SUED BY GIRL FOR $31,568

Miss Kerwin, Clerk of Hingham Man, Says Her Funds Were Invested

Declaring the estate of the late Charles Steere of Hingham, former Boston attorney, is "hopelessly insolvent," Winifred C. Kerwin, for many years a clerk in Steere's office, is seeking in the Suffolk Superior Court to recover $31,568 which she says she gave Steere to invest for her.

To just what extent the estate is involved cannot be estimated at this time, but several persons claim title to pieces of property and to mortgages which he handled.

Attorney Fred W. Fisher of Winthrop, special administrator of the estate, is endeavoring through litigation and otherwise to gather in the debts due the estate and to get possession of such pieces of property which Steere is alleged to have bought with the aid of "straws."

Miss Kerwin, in answer to allegations to the effect that she was used as a "straw" in various transactions, refuses to admit or deny anything. She says, however, that if the court shall find that she was a "straw," she is willing to abide by whatever finding is made.

She asserts that if her name was affixed to conveyances of real estate, it was placed there by her as a matter of convenience to her employer. She further declares that she should be permitted to retain the deeds to property which it said to actually belong to the Steere estate, in order that she may be protected against any possible loss in consequence of her claim for $31,568.

MINE WAR MAY GO INTO COURT, SAYS HAPGOOD

Question in West Virginia Case Similar to Coronado Fight, Writer Declares

By NORMAN HAPGOOD,
Staff Correspondent of the Boston American.

Washington, Sept. 13.—Among the many ramifications of the coal situation one leads into the Supreme Court of the United States. The essence of the trouble in West Virginia is identical with the question to be decided by the court in the case of the United Mine Workers of America, versus the Coronado Coal Company.

The court may be expected to reach that case in the Autumn as it was argued long ago. If the miners lose they will be fined $600,000 in damages and $25,000 in costs and attorneys' fees. The prospect of such a huge punishment has already cost them heavily in membership, many thinking it wise to resign, while the going was good.

Prairie Creek and Frogtown in Arkansas are mining towns. The mines were run by union labor, with a contract extending to the end of July, 1914.

NON-UNION MEN USED.

Nevertheless, in March of that year, the manager suddenly shut down, discharged the men, and arranged to open in a month with non-union men, with less pay and longer hours.

Both sides armed. The company employed the usual detectives. The operation of the mines under the new non-union plan was put into the hands of a West Virginia corporation, partly to beat the contract with the unions and partly to avoid the State courts and get into the Federal courts.

Old stuff, you see; familiar high industrial ethics. Violence followed, but the case does not turn on violence, any more than violence is an important part of the problem in the recent West Virginia troubles.

The case turns on whether the attempt of the miners to protect their standard of living by trying to interfere with the business of non-union mines was a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

SERIOUS TECHNICALITY.

That may sound funny to the untutored savage, but it is a serious enough technicality to the miners. If their attempt to unionize can be decorated with such a term as conspiracy in restraint of trade, then a clause in the Sherman act comes into play, giving the mine-owners triple damages for all injuries suffered.

If one can guess from the Duplex case, in which a similar controversy in the printing trade was recently decided, the miners haven't the ghost of a chance. The court refused in the Duplex case to find that the workers had any direct interest in non-union standards in other States that interfered with the establishment of their own higher standards.

Of course in the coal case the technicality relied upon by the attorneys for the operators is flagrantly unreal. To the mind not complicated by legal convolutions, it is clear enough that the object of the miners had essentially nothing to do with the questions of competition and trade. Interferences with trade was a mere result.

PROTECT OWN STANDARDS.

The purpose was to protect their own standards. The law allows them to unionize in their own region to protect those standards. The only question is whether they have a right to go out into another state and attempt to unionize for the same purpose of protecting their standards.

In the troubles we have been seeing in West Virginia miners from other states were trying to unionize mines, the competition of which was throwing them out of employment and beating down their standards of living. If the Coronado case goes as the precedents would indicate, then it follows that the attempt of miners from outside to unionize the West Virginia mines has been technically wrong.

In the Duplex case Justice Brandeis, dissenting, said in substance that the difference was not about the established principles of law. It was about what constituted, under modern conditions, a direct interest in a labor group. In other words, he dissented from some of the other justices not because he knew more about the law, but because he knew more about modern industry.

ERRORS ON BOTH SIDES.

There are errors and faults on both sides. There are an infinite number of difficulties, requiring long and patient study. But there is no use whatever in expecting a favorable outcome, or any real progress, until the right, to unionize is conceded.

Capital, as illustrated in this Coronado case, is fluid, elastic, indefinitely related and able to take every advantage of its complicated relations. Until it is conceded that labor in one place also has a proper interest in what happens in another place we cannot even begin to find our way out of the wilderness.

MANY GUESSING FOR DORT COUPE

The first day of the guessing contest for the Dort coupe, which is on exhibition at the salesrooms of the Utterbach-Gleason Company, No. 870 Commonwealth avenue, forecasts a huge number of answers before the contest closes.

The salesrooms had hardly opened Monday morning when interested contestants began to flock in to look at the glass container which holds the gasoline. Some brought rules and instruments to measure the jar, but these were not allowed. You can look at it and then judge or estimate by mathematical calculation how much gasoline is in it, then guess how far the car will run on that amount.

The speedometer registers tenths of a mile and all these count in the mileage.

FACIAL EXPRESSIONS OF ALL IN SQUAD STUDY FOR GRID COACHES

By CHARLES E. PARKER.

The popular kindergarten pastime of "making faces" comes in mighty handy in this football age and generation.

A whole lot of ambitious young men who already have been dumped, or shortly will be released, from our our college football squads, would have lingered much longer, possibly permanently, had they appreciated the importance of grimacing at their coaches, at their rivals, at the tackling dummy, at the charging machine, and at all other things and individuals connected or associated with the great college sport.

Or course, grimaces, like those employed by Charley Chaplin or Fatty Arbuckle, wouldn't have helped them a great deal, but a Bill Hart or Tom Mix expression, the kind they employ when the horrid old villain is about to get his, would have been much worth their while.

Yes, sir! A feller who can register grim determination, absolute fearlessness, aggressive confidence and the like, and keep registering such for the first week or two of preliminary training, need only boast the regulation assortment of arms and legs to retain a place on the squad when the first cut comes. After that he usually must back up his facial expressions with deeds, although in some instances the best grimacers have been known to stick with the varsity throughout the entire season.

And it's all because modern football coaches, whether they recognize the fact or not, rely very much on character analysis as determined by the features and expression of their candidates, in naming men for the varsity squad. In other words, they take three looks at the countenance to every one they take at the calves or the biceps.

As a matter of fact, with the huge, unwieldy squads that now annually report to college gridiron coaches, it is essential that they should follow some such course in separating the potential wheat from the potential chaff. A thorough test in all departments of football for each one of fifty to 100 gridiron candidates within the limited period of the preliminary season would be a physical impossibility.

Consequently when Algernon's face registers and maintains an "I-eat-em-alive" expression, the coach just makes sure that he isn't walking on crutches and stamps, "Hold for varsity squad," or words to that effect, on Algy's back and Algy starts the second round in the battle for first team positions.

Vocal expression can, and often does come to the aid of facial expression in giving the coach a favorable impression of the candidate's football qualities, for although the faculty might not approve it, and the coach seldom urges it, a feller who, after missing a forward pass, splits the air with a blood-curdling "Rahrah," at least that air in the immediate vicinity of the coach, makes a much better impression than does the individual who greets his own error of misjudgment with a inchoate "Oh, Fudge."

* * *

The time may come, although it is probably very far off, when professionals in character analysis will assume a place on coaching staffs. Nowadays, however, this work is performed by the coach and his ability in this line of endeavor often determines his success as a gridiron mentor.

* * *

A coach thinks a long time before he drops from his staff a chap who, by means of facial and vocal expression, indicates by his lip-tearing-up-an-at-em-never-say-die-rough-and-ready-fighting-man, and even if he throws a little in talent, the coach is more inclined to give that feller another chance, whereas under the same circumstances he would promptly drop one who had failed physiognomically, and thoracically.

The study of facial make-up and expression on the part of many of the leading football coaches, does not end with the dumping of excess football material, however. Some go as far as mentally, or otherwise, diagraming the football face. They have a type of face for each position and candidates who conform most closely to the respective ideal, enjoy a distinct advantage, other things being nearly equal, over candidates who fail to show the desired characteristics.

Successful quarterbacks are studied; so are successful ends, and tackles and guards and centres and halfbacks and fullbacks, and their common traits listed. Sometimes, it is true, the coach is unconscious of this study and its conclusions, yet few coaches are without definite ideals as to the qualities desired in each position, those apart from the game itself, and instinctively, if not otherwise they apply these ideals Motto: If you want to win the old college letter, look tough.

BAY STATE A. A. HOLDS GOLF TOURNEY

More Than One Hundred Participants in Competition at Bellevue Club

The members and guests of the Bay State Automobile Association will show their speed on the links of the Bellevue Golf Club, Melrose, today when more than 100 participants entered in the fifth monthly tournament of the association, will attempt to annex the coveted silver prizes offered for the best scores of the day.

While there will be no speed limit after their arrival at the Bellevue Golf Club, the autoists will be forced to exercise their usual caution in avoiding the numerous traps throughout the course.

One of the largest crowds of the season is expected to attend today's golf tournament as the past performances held under the auspices of the Bay State Automobile Association have met with the approval of all the dealers and guests of the association.

Dealers from various parts of New England representing different automobile companies have entered the tournament, and the committee on arrangements has endeavored to make today's performance the most successful of the season, offering valuable silver prizes for the lowest net and gross scores. Valuable prizes will also be awarded to the winners in the novice class.

The golfers will be divided into two classes according to their scores in the previous tournaments of the association. This will be the first time in the history of the association that the entries have been placed in different classes and it is expected that the competition will be much keener.

It has been announced that the Alvan T. Fuller Cup, on which James A. Travers already has two legs, will not be put in competition. Those golfers who have been shooting at the cup offered by the Lieutenant-Governor, will therefore try to win one of the other prizes offered.

The big links will look more like an automobile show than a golf tournament, with every make of car, from the well-known "fivver" to the most expensive machine manufactured, smeared all over the landscape.

Even the tire makers will be represented and, although all the famous dealers and manufacturers will be gathered together on the grounds, business will be forgotten for the day. Speed—that will be the byword of the autoists and traffic rules will be cast in the discard.

The committee has made every possible arrangement for the comfort of the guests and a special luncheon will be provided.

TAD'S TIDBITS

A LOT OF BUM BOXERS

There never was a time in the whole history of boxing when the men of that profession were so bad as they are today.

At present there are two really good champions—Jack Dempsey, kind of the heavies, and Bennie Leonard, king of the 135-pounders. The rest you can toss into the ash can.

There are other fairly good titleholders, but the writer can't class them with the champs of other days.

And when one stops to think of the fortunes they get in purses these days it almost knocks you silly. Think of a ham and egg fighter like Johnny Wilson getting $37,500 to box another ham and egg fighter, Bryan Downey. Wilson's end would be a fortune for the ordinary man. It is more than he could earn in a lifetime, yet this cheese champion slaps his way through twelve rounds of boxing and picks up the change.

Tut Rickard isn't to blame. The sucker public is the cause of it.

It's no wonder the fighters laugh.

As long as the sucker public falls for the bunk, big purses will rule.

There may be hard times all over America, but when you look over a fight crowd and think of what they pay for seats you really can't believe that the wolf is mousing at any door.

Bum fighters are getting rich and they don't have to learn how to box. We haven't a heavyweight, excepting the champion, worth his salt. Name your best heavy, leaving out Dempsey. Will he fight Fulton? No, you bet he won't. They'll all fight Dempsey to ride short end, but get pale at the thought of meeting Fulton.

Where are the light heavies? Joe Walcott, a welterweight, could lick every one we have. Can you picture any of them in the ring with the Langford of a few years ago? And the heavies—can you see them fighting Sharkey, Jeffries, Johnson, Corbett, Jackson or Fitzsimmons a few years ago?

Johnny Wilson, middleweight champion! That's a laugh.

Try to picture him against Tommy Ryan, Kid McCoy, Jack Root, Hugo Kelly, Stanley Ketchel, Billy Papke, or even Sailor Burke.

Pipe the tough birds Leonard has to fight. There isn't one who is a real contender. Where would that bunch be with Lavigne, Erne, McFadden, Hawkins, Gans, Nelson or Willie Fitzgerald.

Feathers? Johnny Kilbane, an old man, still rules them. There isn't a feather who stands out as a real contender.

They'd rank high in battles with the old-timers, wouldn't they? Can you see them beating McGovern, Corbett, Griffo, Gardner, Herrera, Attell or Yanger?

The public doesn't seem to tire. They pay and the bruisers collect. Fighters today don't need to learn how to box. Things are coming too easy.

Bout Held Up by Rain

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 13.—Lew Tendler and Sailor Friedman, who were kept apart last night by rain, will meet here tonight at the Phillies Ball Park in an eight-round bout.

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 13.—The ten-round bout between Mike Gibbons of St. Paul and Young Fisher of Syracuse, N. Y., middleweights, scheduled for last night, was postponed until tonight on account of rain.

RODERICK LOST TO THE B. C. GRID SQUAD

Star Reported to Have Entered Columbia — Liston Back, but Still Crippled

Coincident with the return of Jimmy Liston to the Heights yesterday was the failure of Ben Roderick to put in appearance. Rumors were current at the Heights for the last week that Roderick would return. His return would have been a great asset to the team, as Ben flashed brilliantly on the gridiron last Fall and he was compared favorably to Eddie Mahan by even Cavanaugh himself. It is reported on good authority that Roderick has entered Columbia University.

Liston, who has been missing from practice for the past week on account of a broken toe, was on the field yesterday during the afternoon practice. Liston's toe is still tender and he is playing carefully to avoid being laid up again.

In the absence of Coach Cavanaugh Captain Comerford took charge of the squad. There was a short practice session for the quarterbacks, with Jim Kelley and Tom Phillips performing. It was Jim Kelley's first day with the squad, but he is by no means lost in the quarterback position, having filled that post with credit at Geddard Seminary two years ago.

The line coach to fill "Moose" Englehorn's place has not yet been picked. It was rumored that Kennedy, who captained the Dartmouth eleven in 1910, had been signed up, but it was announced at the Heights that the report had no foundation. The Boston College graduate athletic board will meet on Wednesday night and it is likely that the question of a new line coach will be discussed.

SIEGEL AND MORLEY IN BATTLE AT ARMORY CLUB TONIGHT

By JACK CONWAY

Nate Siegal will make a mighty bid to regain his position as New England's leading welterweight when he starts a new ring drive by meeting Mike Morley in a ten-round bout at the Armory A. A.'s show at Mechanics Building tonight.

This match was virtually made by the Boxing Commission, which was apparently anxious to prove it was a versatile body. For the benefit of those gentlemen who arrived in Boston today from South Africa or some other distant point, it might be well to chronicle the fact that Siegal and Morley battled at Salem a few weeks ago. The verdict went to Nate, but the Boxing Commission upon inquiry seemed to be of the opinion that Morley was done an injustice. The result of all this was that the officials who worked at the Salem show were suspended, and Siegel was informed that he would not be permitted to engage in another match in Massachusetts until after he fought Morley again.

* * *

We don't know who the officials will be tonight, but we hope they will be fearless gentlemen who will give the decision as they see things. Maybe Morley did win at Salem, but tonight will be another thing again.

Siegel says he will be in as good condition as he was for Kirby when he enters the ring this p. m. The Revere boy was at Harris Flaherty's camp at Lowell for ten days training for his tussle with Eddie Shevlin which was banned by the Commission. The Morley match was then made and Siegal continued training.

* * *

The news that Siegel will disregard scientific methods and go in and fight Morley caused the stock of the former New England champion to go soaring. Nate never had any license to become a Jack Britton in the grand old game of swat. He is one of those strong, rough, courageous youths who must rely upon Dempsey methods rather than Carpentier tactics to gain him honors in the ring.

* * *

Morley is also a rushing, two-handed fighter. At Salem the Hartford man stood toe to toe with Siegel and they gave one of the most brilliant fistacuffs staged in a New England ring in several months.

Morley believes that his aggressive tactics will gain him the honors tonight. There are certain gentlemen connected with the boxing game in these parts who would like to see the Hartford man win for reasons best known to themselves, but we do not believe that the officials appointed to serve at tonight's show will give the invader any of the best of things.

If Siegel wins he will be signed to oppose Eddie Shevlin at a show to be staged by the Armory Club two weeks from tonight. Shevlin is doing light training at Hanover and will branch forth with increased work provided Siegel scores a win tonight.

* * *

Mickey Donovan of Brockton will have Young Palmer of Waltham as an opponent in the semi-final of ten rounds. Young Tenney of Cambridge and Bert Jones of Revere will battle in an eight-round event, while there will also be a six-session preliminary.

MANY GRIDIRON STARS COME OUT OF WEST

By HUGH S. FULLERTON.

Regarding what we refer to as intersectional football, let us take counsel together. We have conceded for years that Yale, Harvard, Princeton constituted football, and that whatever came afterward came afterward. Let us start with the idea that we must let the best team win, provided there is no way of keeping the best team from beating our team, which, I take it, is the best team even when it is beaten.

For a considerable number of years I was in the Mid-West contending that the Mid-West football teams could beat the Yale-Harvard-Princeton combination. In view of later developments, it seems that this idea was biased. Yet at the same time, we in the Mid-West know that we had football players who were as good or better than any in the East.

Let us consider the East-West standards of those days. Stagg, Yost, Williams and other Western coaches were turning out great football teams. So were Yale, Harvard and Princeton. One season O'Dea, at Wisconsin, developed a great team. Pat O'Dea, who was the greatest drop kicker in the history of the sport, was kicking for Wisconsin, and his team was to play Yale. Phil King, who had been a hero at Yale, was coaching Wisconsin. The day Wisconsin came onto Yale Field to stage the first of the real challenges of the West against the football supremacy of the East Pat ran out into the ball end, under the shadow of his own goal line, kicked the ball clear over Yale's line. The crowd stopped cheering and sat down with a sudden "O-o-o-ooh!" a grunt of defeat.

WHY EASTERN SUPREMACY

Being a Mid-Westerner, I never could understand why the East claimed supremacy. In fact, the first time I ever conceded the fact that the East might have a shade was when, coming East as a player, I felt the difference in tackling. I never had been hit so hard or so low, never had been roughed as scientifically and never had learned the use of elbows and arms.

In those days I was a husky and extremely fast kid, a football player used perhaps because of speed. I had held track records and could run close to ten seconds in football togs. I never wore pads or protectors of any sort, and lasted just three weeks with an Eastern team, during which I was smashed all to pieces. I did not know how to avoid tackles nor how to tackle. The low diving, hard smashing game was all Eastern. Ten years later the Mid-West players were smashing lower and harder than the Eastern ones were.

It was quite evident that the difference in football, in those days, was not in the players but in the coaching. Even a mediocre coach made a lot of difference. I never shall forget the surprise to me of the effect of a little coaching by a fellow who had played with Princeton and absorbed some of the tricks of the game. He showed me how to handle opposition, how to break through—and how to use my speed. The fact that three ribs and two collarbones rather marred the season made no difference, nor have I had any idea since then that sufficient coaching would have prevented the physical smashups, which were probably due to the danger of a little teaching.

WESTWARD GOES THE STAR.

Westward the star of empire takes its way, and also the star of football is going in the same direction. There is no serious doubt as to that. The supremacy of the Eastern universities in the last two decades never has been due to the fact that the East bred football players. It has been due to the fact that the best football players aspired to play with Yale, Harvard or Princeton. In fact, the geographical study shows that the greatest of the Eastern college teams depended largely for their success upon Western and Mid-Western playing talent.

The good athletes of the West and Mid-West came from the Central-West and were ambitious only to get into Eastern schools. The moment it became evident that there was no difference between East and West excepting training and coaching, the big advantage of the East ceased to exist.

It was not until the development of the forward passing game that the West and the Central-West began to come into direct competition. The passing game, which was developed in the Central-West, was the first big forward step in football. Fact is, the East never fully caught up.

The Eastern coaches thought the passing game would be dropped or amended, and coached their teams accordingly, while the Central-West believed the passing game had come to stay and went to it. They were far ahead in that department of the game when they commenced to take hats off to East. The Westerners, even tied up by tradition than the Mid-West, cut loose without restrictions and commenced to come to the front. All of which proves that a man's a man for a' that and a' that, and that coaching and training is the real stuff.

WOMEN OPEN PLAY FOR TENNIS TITLE

Philadelphia, Sept. 13.—The tournament for the women's Middle States lawn tennis championship, the opening of which was postponed yesterday because of rain, was expected to get under way today. It will be held at the Philadelphia Cricket Club. Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory, holder of the women's national title, and many other prominent players were among the long list of entries.

McNALLY OF YANKEES SLIPS AWAY AND MARRIES

Scranton, Pa., Sept. 13.—Slipping quietly away from New York, Mike McNally, third baseman for the New York Yankees, was married to Miss Mae Murray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Murray of this city. The ceremony was performed in St. Paul's Catholic Church by the Rev. M. F. O'Rourke, pastor. Miss Mae Cunningham and Peter O'Donnell, of this city, were the attendants.

Because of the close race between the Yankees and Cleveland Indians, the newly weds will return at once to New York. The newly weds say they will do their honeymooning in November.

SOX AND TIGERS HOOK UP IN THREE-GAME SERIES AT FENWAY PARK

The Tigers, with two victories in their most recent games, invaded Fenway Park today for a three-game series with the Red Sox. The Red Sox enjoyed the Tiger hunt as they will the chase, tomorrow and Friday, for they are playing with better spirit than all season. Detroit did not fare well on the second trip to this city, but are up against it for fair this time, for the Red Sox are out for a kill. Manager Duffy hopes to have his team land in the first division before the season closes.

As our home town clan is only a few points away from being up with the leaders, it is possible that the final appearance of the Detroit outfit will be the stormiest session that the Red Sox have yet encountered on their own lot.

* * *

Of late the Sox have been showing spurts of real championship baseball. They have brought them within hailing distance of Washington, in fourth place. The pitchers, especially Bush, who recently annexed his seventh straight victory, are, at this late hour, showing signs of life.

* * *

With the team, in general, playing baseball that is worthy of a first division place, all signs point to a clean sweep of the three games to be played. Detroit has been relying on the merits of their rookie pitchers to win games, but their exhibitions in the box are similar to the performances of the "two-year-olds" considered the most unreliable in the world.

* * *

Dauss, the backbone of the Bengals' hurling corps, has been putting good ball all season, but his appearance in the Detroit lineup is not expected until the final game. He worked Thursday against Chicago.

* * *

While all this activity is taking place Washington will meet Browns who have played an excellent brand of baseball and who will fail to strengthen their hold on the third rung. The senators in order to hold fourth place, must display their best to offset the fast traveling St Louis club who are now cavorting with the leaders.

* * *

In all probability Manager Duffy will send either Pennock or Meyers to the serving box today while Leonard may be given an other start at his old mates.

GIANTS ROOT FOR BRAVES TO BEAT PIRATES IN THIRD SESSION

Pittsburgh, Sept. 13.—Barney Dreyfuss almost turned himself inside out yesterday, for he was on the nervous edge all through a strenuous afternoon. The Pirates and the Braves played a double-header at Forbes Field, and honors were even at the close of the September afternoon. The Corsairs won the first, 5 to 4, but only after a most terrific battle lasting fifteen innings. The Braves won the second, 4 to 3.

The uphill, courageous playing of the Braves in both games was the outstanding feature of the big program for they came from behind and won the first game, only in case it later and captured the second by also rushing in when it looked as Pittsburgh might make a double killing.

* * *

Babe Adams, the veteran who almost single handed slew the Tigers in the World Series in 1909, checked the Braves in their desperate attempt to make the Pirates walk the plank in the first game. The Braves knocked the clever southpaw, Wilbur Cooper, out of the box in the first game, but by the same token the Corsairs humbled Joe Oeschger's pride when they batted him off the mound.

* * *

The Braves also found themselves in a punishing mood in the second encounter for they inflicted much pain on Whitey Wanner that he was forced to retire in favor of Zinn Jack Watson did the chucking for the Braves in the second fray, but Watson was no mean hand as a punch hitter in the nonpareil test. In the eighth inning which proved good judge-ment on Manager Mitchell's part for Gibson made the safe hit that sent in the tieing run.

* * *

Rabbit Maranville's double in the seventh inning of the first game spelled joy for the Pittsburgh rooters and disaster for the Braves.

* * *

Big John Scott and Morgan were the relief horses for the Braves.

* * *

Captain Billy Southworth is out of the game for a few days at least. He strained several ligaments in his left leg in the first game when he collided with Nixon.

* * *

But for Captain Carey's running only the first game would not have ended as it did for as soon as Carey for Max went all the way from first base to the plate on Maranville's two bagger. At that Carey took a desperate chance but he got away with it for Gibson dropped the ball as the pirate baseman looked as if he had nipped the fleet footed minister.

The Braves won the first in score and got two runs in the fourth. Nixon was safe on Tierney's double Barbare forced Nixon. Southworth filled out to Carey but Tony Boeckel singled and sent Barbare to third while he raced down to second when Carey fumbled the ball. Both Barbare and Boeckel scored on Nicholson's hit.

* * *

The Pirates made one in their half Maranville fanned. Barbare walked. Barbare tossed out Shortstop. Barbare moving to second. Barbare scored on Tierney's single. Grimm also single but Schmidt could not bring in either Tierney or Grimm, or both, as he flied to Stengel.

* * *

The Corsairs tied the score in the fifth. Cooper popped to Boeckel. Southworth and Nixon collided when Captain Will made a remarkable one-handed catch on Gibson's liner. Gibson hit to the right field fence Southworth lost consciousness shortly after and was carried off the field. That sent Nicholson to right field. Powell to centre and Nixon to left. Carey walked and stole second and scored on the hit Maranville's single Barbare's fly out.

* * *

The Pirates made two runs in the eighth and looked as their game and the Braves were tied at two all in the ninth and scored two runs in the ninth to take the game.

* * *

The Braves might have won in the ninth but for the fact that Hoike fell asleep at the switch and allowed himself to be caught napping and run down off third between third and the plate, although Watter must not be condemned too much, for his single scored Powell and started the bombardment that caused the retirement of Cooper.

* * *

The Braves came from behind in the second game and defeated the Pirates, 4 to 3, after they had trailed 3 to 0. It was a 2 to 0 score up to the seventh inning.

* * *

In the seventh they began hammering the offerings of Aldridge in first three men batting being safe. Barbare singled to left field scoring Nixon and Powell was forced to home Maranville and Barbare got two more on an error by Southworth sending three runs over and losing the game.

* * *

The lucky batsmen were Christenbury, Cruise, Boeckel, O'Neil and Gibson, who batted for Watson.

In the next inning after two men were out Cruise failed to get the ball over for Christenbury and Cruise and they paraded, which followed Tony Boeckel's but handle single, into center, scoring Christenbury with the run that was eventually the winner.

* * *

Watson was hard hit in the early part of the game but the Pirates wasted many chances. In the third inning with Carey on third and Barbare on second Bigbee's liner after Wanner had popped to Watson gave Nixon a chance to score. Nixon threw him off and the ball got away from Watson and Carey scored from third on the play.

In the fourth inning Barbare singled with one out and scored when Gibson booted the ball over the pitcher's head allowing Barbare to go to third. Barbare easily scored from third on the play.

In the fifth Carey took a desperate chance but he got away with a double play and scored when Gibson booted the ball over the pitcher's head allowing Barbare to go to third. Barbare easily scored from third on the play.

The Pirates had a splendid opportunity to score in the third inning but Watson pitched himself out of a bad hole. Rubert was left off with a single and Powell tried when Barbare threw to Christenbury catching the next three men were unable to get the ball out of the field.

Says the Wireless Is a Wonderful Thing---A Patient Can Now Be Operated on by the Morse Code

Thanks to the Seamen's Church Institute, all of the big ships at sea will now be able to furnish their passengers with medical advice by radio if a pretty nurse when you can have your tonsils cut out by wireless.

If it wasn't for this sustaining organization we wouldn't be able to have our adenoids removed by long distance.

If you get a pain in your side while you're at sea you just tell the wireless operator about it and you have your appendix taken out by Morse code.

Instead of being operated on by stabs and stitches, you'll be operated on by dots and dashes

If you break your leg or arm they have a special signal for that. It is K. H. K. F. It means "Hail Doctor Kum Flail."

Of course, the spelling is wrong but who cares about being correct when you're rushing for a doctor.

The patient might die while you're correcting your grammar.

Though you may be eight hundred miles away from him, the doctor picks up an instrument and listens to your heart. He might tell you it was beating too out and all the time he was listening to the engine.

He'd think he was listening to your breathing but he'd be using a brass steam pipe from the boiler room.

How is a doctor going to feel your pulse or take your temperature by Marconi?

He'd have to look at your tongue through a pair of marine glasses.

He might think he saw a coat on it when all the time it would be a vest and a pair of trousers.

He tells the wireless operator what kind of medicine to give you and then the captain of the ship acts as a human guinea pig until he comes to a liner drug store.

It might take the druggist quite a while to fill the prescription and then the captain is liable to get a tag for padding too long.

The wireless is a wonderful thing but can get ill out at sea and the doctor knows all about it ten minutes after you get the first pain.

Of course, there is a difference in the time, too, and in some cases the doctor knows you're ailing three hours before you get sick.

It might be 3 o'clock in New York and 7 o'clock out at sea where you are so the doctor's bo nt to tell you to get pains four hours before you get them.

They usually operate an hour after an accident so if you are a heavy sufferer at sea the wireless operator and radio physician act your pa. I would be set three hours before you [illegible]

TILDEN TO PLAY JAP IN STAR NET MATCH

Tennis Players Get Going Again in Singles Tournament After Forced Layoff

Philadelphia, Sept. 13.—Indications today were that weather conditions would be favorable for resuming play this afternoon in the fortieth annual lawn tennis singles tournament for the championship of the United States, interrupted yesterday by rain.

The feature event of today's program was the match between William T. Tilden, 2d, of Philadelphia, holder of the world's championship and the title in competition, and Zenzo Shimidzu of Japan, who came within two points of beating Tilden in the Davis Cup matches.

Next to this match chief interest was centred in that between William M. Johnston of San Francisco, runner-up last year, and Vincent Richards, the eighteen-year-old Yonkers, N. Y., star, who has won six tournaments this year, including that for the Rhode Island State title, in which he defeated Tilden.

Today's program was to open with two matches on the courts within the grounds of exclusive Two men nets of the Australian Davis Cup team, John B Hawkes and James O. Anderson were opponents in one while in the other the veteran British international, F. Gordon Lowe of Manchester, Eng., was to meet Dean Mathey of Cranford, N. J.

HARVARD COACHES HOLD 63 ON FIRST TEAM

The initial cut in the Harvard football squad has been made, thirty-three men being returned for further trial. The normal makeup of the Crimson varsity during the last six weeks of the season is around the forty mark, and at least one more cut will be necessary to bring the team down to its real fighting strength.

The squad now consists of eleven tackles, eleven ends, ten guards, nine centres, fourteen backs and eight quarterbacks. The other players were sent to Coach Jimmie Knox of the second varsity. Late for more seasoning and will be used against the varsity for the remainder of the season.

Both Head Coach Fisher and Knox emphasized the fact that good work with the second team will bring the man responsible back with the regulars and every man was told to start out with that end in view and to keep everlastingly at this goal.

George Owen and Charley Pierce are still marked absent. The back is top boy has not yet reported but he is to be looked for tomorrow at the latest. He is down in quarters for practice and weighs in with but little poundage. Both of Tierney is due Thursday and he also at his regular position. Owen is due for a good year in the backfield, while Tierney's ability and strength as well as his headwork, should make him a success at centre or tackle, wherever Coach Fisher assigns him.

Tommie Campbell the little quarterback on Bob Fisher's 1911 team was a caller at Soldiers Field. Tommie will direction the freshman eleven this Fall and is out getting results. He is a good getaway. He will be Doug Murray and Bill Shea's assistants.

Captain Keith Kane is still registered as an end but as a matter of strategy the coaches may be using him there and still intend to play him at tackle, where he is also doing a bit of work. Kane has the weight, experience and strength for tackle, and ought to get back in pretty fair shape as the season at end is fine with Mark Macomber and John Crocker, veterans, supported by good second string men.

Don Ahrier, the varsity halfback, joined the injured squad yesterday. He sprained his wrist cranking an automobile but will soon be around. The other "invalids" are progressing nicely. Jack Breck, the [illegible] guard is still going on about [illegible] will be ready for scrimmage [illegible] substantial by the week end.

The names of all the eleven men on the first squad follow:

Ends—J. Crocker, R. Crosby, R. F. Ford, J. Brown, J. Bartlett, Dudley Dunlap, Jones, H. Ker, C. C. Macomber, W. G. Miller.

Tackles—H. Cummings, Mrs. Hyers, J. Kane, R. Miller, C. J. Robertson, C. Potter, H. S. Pratt, E. W. Rice, Charles A. Anthony, W. G. Hooker, F. J. Brown, C. R. Connor, H. R. Grew, A. Miller, Ernest L. H. Bacon, Norton H. Walker.

Guards—S. Bradford, F. Brennan, F. H. Briggs, J. Bullard, C. F. Byers, F. Ingersoll, C. Tenney, W. E. Wood, P. Wright.

Quarterbacks—C. P. Bacon, A. J. Linden, F. H. Moore, F. Rockwell, J. Sawyer, J. J. Lee, R. Warner.

Halfbacks—J. Ahrier, J. Bullard, Jr., Chapin, H. Chisholm, F. Coolidge, J. Ingersoll, Jr., J. Lee, Jr., Sanborn, Timothy L. Ford, W. S. Swan, Jr., Jr., Woodbridge.

Fullbacks—Dudley Dunlap, Jr., Fuller, J. Hamilton, Jr., Hayes, Jr., Rockwell.

Ends and head coach were given out yesterday and from now on the work will be more rugged.

Arthur Stringer's Studio Romance

A Stirring Narrative of the Influence of Love on the Lives of a Girl and a Man

THE STORY SO FAR

Owen Storrow, a young sculptor, arrives in New York from Canada to perfect himself in his art. By defending Torrie Throssel, an actress, young, beautiful and poor, he wins her love. Later he goes to the luxurious home of his stepaunt, who has offered him a studio, and meets there his cousin, Charlotte Kirkner, who, as rich as Torrie is poor, takes unusual interest in him. He saves her from drowning. She avows her love for him, and he leaves the Kirkner home for a New York studio. He meets Hardy, a novelist, who takes him to his rooms.

THEY merely endured and waited and prayed for a change of wind. It was the humidity, everybody about Storrow kept explaining, the windless and enervating air which made clothing hang limp and heavy on the languid body and seemed to sap the vigor from all action. Even human beings were for the most part content to pack themselves close and say little about anything, as a rule discarding coats and hats, covering their limbs with the lightest garments that could be used.

A Time of Freedom

This was harvest time for Storrow, for those grievous young body faced that excessive heat without any great distress. He delighted in the city as free as the wind eager for those pictorial aspects of life which only torrid weather brought to the open.

He watched the sweltering thousands streaming to the recreation piers, the heat-weary gamblers crowding the withered grass of the open parks, the half-clad children swarming about the dripping hydrants and hokey pokey carts, the bare-torsoted men and women who moved languidly about in the shadows or sat lounging and fanning in open doorways.

When his legs grew tired he sat and watched them and rested. When hunger assailed him he dropped into a nearby eating-house and ate, forgetting the heat in the rich shadowy horn of the never-ending battle between drawn curtains and transparent sun revealing in all unconscious beauty of pink and buttermilked young waitresses in half-boots of cambric and [illegible] what might have been the pointed breasts of an Aphrodite.

It was in one of these places, known as "Chop-House Jakes," that Storrow one day stumbled upon a surprisingly appetizing luncheon. He looked up from a broiled porterhouse which he had picked bare to the bone to find himself being surveyed by a pair of studious and half-ironical eyes.

"[illegible] manner doesn't seem to have suffered much with your apparently [illegible] man," the stranger observed in a crisp yet companionable voice.

"I eat a steak to make you forget about the weather," countered Storrow. He found himself confronted by a sharp and lanky man somewhere between thirty-five and forty-five, a fastidiously apparelled and acute-looking man with hair turned iron gray over the ears, humorous eyes and a rather grim mouth.

"I come here for 'em occasionally. So acknowledged. "They're as good as you'll get in the city." He digressed into a flight-hearted but comprehensive description of Manhattan eating places. "I'm saving all this" he concluded, "because I know you haven't been here very long."

Introductions

"What makes you think that?" demanded Storrow, with a smile to unedge the brusqueness of his question.

"By that coat of tan," declared the other. The younger man thereupon explained how and where he had acquired that Madura-brown skin.

"That's great," exclaimed the older man, with a quick and unlooked for thump of enthusiasm. "My name's Hardy, by the way."

"Not Hardy the novelist?" asked Storrow.

"Merely one of 'em—the little one," replied Hardy, less easily acknowledged the younger man.

"I followed you," replied Torrie quite simply feeling less lonely in that vast city of unknown faces.

"I hope we're going to be friends," announced Hardy from the serener plateaus of experience. "And I suppose you're here for work, or you wouldn't be on this gridiron of an island at the end of August. I've got a play going on myself. But it's going to be a failure."

"Why a failure?"

"Another case of too many cooks and the broth spoiled. I'm only the author, you see. So all I have to do is sit back and watch the doctors amputate. It hits you harder than ninety-six in the shade, after you've sweated blood to give 'em something more than waffle-iron product."

They talked on for half an hour, though the companionable haze of tobacco smoke, until Hardy detected signs of restlessness in his younger friend. This restiveness was really based on the thirst of the woodman's tongs for unpolluted fresh air.

"Busy today?" casually inquired the novelist.

Storrow acknowledged that he was not.

"Then what's the matter with dropping up to my digs, over on the Avenue. It's cool there, and I've some early Wolf Thompson animal sketches that will interest you."

Storrow was glad to go. He liked that older and kindly-eyed man. He enjoyed the man's talk, as they sauntered across the city skirted Greenwich Village, invaded Washington Square and approached the narrower but more resplendent canyon of Fifth avenue.

Hardy did most of the talking. He ridiculed the commercialized bohemianism of "The Village," with its bobbed hair and its bad art, its anarchistic free verse and its still freer sex relationships. He wrung a laugh, too, from the self-imposed pauperism of the MacDougall Alley colony and the convivial Archerism of "The Sheaf."

There were, of course, the producers as well as the poseurs, the frail-blazers as well as the stumpjumpers, but the former were much too busy for attitudinising. Storrow's guide paused long enough to point out a group or two of Italian children in the square, and the balanced red brick colonial of Henry James' renown, and the trade-doomed architecture of the avenue debauching up through the ferruginous forest of skyscrapers.

A very passable amelete, he solemnly explained, could still be bought at the Brevoort.

"I like the old street," Hardy acknowledged with genuine feeling as they went side by side up the avenue. "It's one of the few we have with a soul of its own." It seemed an older and sedater city in which Storrow now found himself, a city of quiet side streets and window boxes and well-scrubbed marble steps, of polished brass knockers on white enameled doors, of bronze handrails leading up to panelled mahogany portals of red brick overrun with ivy, of unpretentious three-story homes mildly ornamented with tubbed evergreens and tiny quadrangles of turf and roses and chrysanthemums.

Many Drawbacks

And over all was the friendly and unsolicited tone of time, depressing Storrow at the same moment that it engaged him, dimly disturbing him by its unalleviated air of remoteness, reminding him as it did of movements and civilizations of which he had not been and never could be a part.

Hardy was still talking when they stopped to turn up the handstone steps of what had once been a millionaire's mansion. But the receding tides of fashion had long since left it on the dull ebb tide of the roomer and the studio-renter.

"Here's where I hang out," he explained, "it has its drawbacks but it's worth the noise and the dust from those eternal cars."

Storrow found Hardy's apartment much simpler than he had expected. There was no clutter of rugs and armor and old brass. Hardy a workroom, in fact, would have seemed bald but for its revolving stand of reference books. It had the appearance of being organized for work, and work alone. Its almost commercial atmosphere was increased by the presence of an elaborate filing cabinet and an electric fan on its shelf above the stenographer's table.

Another Scene Recalled

It was only in the living room to the front, overlooking the avenue, that Storrow found some slight tendency towards luxuriousness. On the walls of that room he saw a pastel by Blum, three Zorn etchings and a Carrol Beckwith portrait of Hardy himself as he must have appeared some ten or twelve years earlier in life.

What caught the visitor's attention, however, was a small genre canvas in a faded gold frame. It showed a nude woman sitting relaxed on the edge of a model throne, staring at a wide studio window drenched with rain. She stared out through the gray light listlessly, unconsolately. Lastly There was ennui in the thick-shouldered figure with its meditative eyes and its over-burdened mass of dark hair, the momentary lassitude of a body so vital that it carried a touch of animality.

But what brought Storrow up short was its quick power to recall another and a quite different scene —the scene of a half-clad figure sitting abstractedly on a fire-escape slowly winding up the selfsame mass of dark hair with the selfsame look of friendliness. But he left the older man's presence carrying with him an undefined and accordingly an incontestable impression of his own callow and inexperienced youth. He was a beginner, without standing, with everything still to do. Hardy was right; New York was made for workers.

WHEN A GIRL MARRIES

ROMANCE OF NEWLY WEDDED LIFE

By Ann Lisle

Copyright, 1921, by King Feature Syndicate, Inc.

"DONNA ANNA, will you ever forgive me?" cried Tom Mason, as the car leaped forward out of the range of Slim Barrow's malignant eye.

"Forgive you — for managing things so smoothly — for getting such perfect action from headquarters?" I parried, trying to gloss over Tom's blunder.

I knew as well as he did that if he hadn't crushed from his place of concealment and made his sudden leap into the car Darrow's arrest would have remained shrouded in mystery. But the stir and bustle Tom caused had attracted Darrow's attention. There was nothing to be gained by reproaches—either from me or from Tom to himself.

"You managed splendidly," I went on. "I'm tremendously grateful—"

"I made a darn fool of myself!" muttered Tom. "The worst of it is that it's all due to my not having the common sense I'd expect of a ten-year-old. I acted as if this was a jolly little party and I had to be the one to hop up and yell 'surprise!' at the end of it."

The car slid into second and slowed down smoothly to a halt.

Not So Sure

"Afraid"—repeated Tom curtly. "I've let you in for danger, for a mighty ugly enemy, and you try to laugh it off and say you're not afraid. For a big girl, you do keep a stiff upper lip."

His hand closed over mine, and I felt myself grow rigid as toy of sentiments for him and his "way for the Indies" swept over me before I had time to frame a rebuff which would have been cruel and ungracious in view of all the circumstances, the limousine door opened, and Lyons, forgetting all his conditions of respectful service, burst out:

"Oh, Mrs. Harrison I wouldn't a had this happen for the world. Darrow he said you was not to be on your guard from now on, please Mrs. Harrison. About myself I don't mind but I'm sorry as the rain should get you, I think I'll go get my nap."

"I know how you feel, Lyons," I replied. "But Darrow is safely out of the way for a while and we don't need worry about him."

"Don't we," cried Lyons. "There's plenty of them that's doing time in stir who'll be getting out and carrying word with them as they come. When you jug a man like Darrow, you put him in touch with a bunch of his pals."

"It's all my fault, Lyons," said Tom, humbly. "But I know you'll be with me in all my efforts to guard Mrs. Harrison from my blunder."

"You bet!" Stop wasting about me. Now's no time for self-pity. I'll stand by you to the end of the world. Now let's get down to facts. Did you see Mr. West, Lyons" Was he there? Because if we have frightened him into realizing that we're to be reckoned with, that more than compensates for bringing down on our heads the wrath of Slim Barrow."

"That's the worst of it," Lyons dejectedly replied. "I couldn't locate this here West nor nil."

"I wonder if he's gone for good? Or is he just off planning some more devilry?"

"You've no idea, have you, Lyons?" demanded Tom.

"No, sir, but I reckon may he was in hiding, sir, for a time," replied Lyons.

"Want him sleuthed out?" asked Tom lightly. "Because if you do I'm your man."

"Have you an idea where he may be?" I asked so eagerly that I betrayed how much it meant to me to know where Dick West was.

To Find Out

"No," replied Tom grimly. "But I've an idea that I'm going to try decuredly hard to find out. That much I owe you for the hotch I made of my first assignment. Take it from me, if Dick West is in this town, I'll know it before the week is out."

"Yes, sir—thank you, sir," replied Lyons in a tone of such heartfelt gratitude that I realised with added force how dangerous Dick West had come to be.

"And now that we've brought you safely home to your own door, Mrs. Harrison, you must go to bed and see you safe at the end of the days [illegible] suggested Tom, "I should [illegible] head.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

By Beatrice Fairfax

Right or Wrong Hero?

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am an only daughter, with five brothers, and we have no mother, so that on a matter of this kind I have no one to go to, and wish you would please advise me.

During my high school days I became friends with one of my acquaintances. This friendship increased during his college days. He has just graduated and started out in the business world. During his college days I was the only girl he ever invited to any of the school affairs. There has never been any talk between us of love, but all our friends, both his and mine, believe we are engaged and tease me about my announcing it now that he is through with his studies. At all affairs we two are coupled together and everyone always speaks of us two as being engaged.

H. M.

PROBABLY the reason for the young man's silence is his financial situation. I suppose he isn't in a position to marry. Either pride or stubbornness may be keeping him from asking you to wait. But in any case he is either selfish and indifferent to the position in which he's putting you or he doesn't care for you except as a friend. I see no reason why you shouldn't permit you, or your brothers to approach him tactfully on the subject. If the man does care for you, your brothers asking him about his things for you won't do you them. If he doesn't care, you'll be better off knowing it now and not going on with the weaving of dreams about the wrong hero.

THE HEADLINE MAID

WHY SHE PUTS IN A BID FOR NOTICE

By Beatrice Fairfax

Who Occupies a Unique Position in the Writeing World as an Authority on the Problems of Life.

DOES the "jass baby" with her painted lips, abbreviated skirts and impertinent way of challenging life and men get the most out of life?

Since printing Beana letter last week testimony has come rolling in from men and women girls on the score of the modern fashion in girls. Today I'm going to give you a copy of Peggy V.'s letter. It bears out the witness to the fact that some girls have a cynical view on the subject of what attracts men. And much as I condemn the view point I'm not so sure the girls who hold it are entirely to blame.

If we're going to work toward sanity and high ideals and the happiness that comes from the real instead of sham, which seems so important today, men and girls will have to come to a better understanding. They'll have to get to the place where they want to appeal to the best in each other instead of frankly and deliberately to the worst.

In regard to Beas' letter, I am with her!

"I used to be a modest girl. I was invited by my fellows, but they never took me anywhere but to some quiet spot where we could 'talk' and be 'comfortable.' I decided I would have to do something to get some different friends. So took stock of myself and made the best of my good points, with the result that I have some friends who are regular men.

"Believe me, you have to be broad-minded to go out with those boys. Do you think the 'regular' fellow cares for the quiet and modest girl? I should say not! Who wants to sit home and miss such good times? Not I. I am just living up to what they expect a girl to be. She has to smoke, drink, dress daringly, have a ready tongue and be a sport. The men are the ones to blame if the girls seem to be lax.

"They like 'em that way, I know they do'

"Sometimes I get thoroughly disgusted and wonder what we are coming to, but 'you might as well be dead as be unpopular.' I am willing to wager that my regular fellow when he wants a girl's company for the evening over asks the quiet girl out. No, he asks the lively one. He wants to be amused. He doesn't want brains. I'm going to be a 'bachelor girl.'

"Peggy has almost settled the controversy—and precisely contrary to what she thinks she's accomplished. In changing her "dumbbells" or bores for what she calls regular fellows and in advancing from the quiet little place where she and her companion could "talk" to one where there was nothing to do but jass and add wildness to wildness, what has she accomplished?

Her illusions are gone. All I can see on the credit side of her ledger and in return for her pains is that people see "in" about and call her popular. Who thinks Peggy has made an advance in life? Who thinks Peggy's to be envied? Who doesn't feel that she has sold her birthright for a mess of pretty poor pottage? And when you come to analyze it thoroughly what is this "regular fellow" for whom Peggy has given up her own ideals of modesty and the companions who offered the simple things which make for real companionship.

Hairs Will Vanish After This Treatment

(Toilet Helps)

You can keep your arms, neck or face free from hair or fuss by the occasional use of plain delatone and in using it you need have no fear of marring or injuring the skin. A thick paste is made by mixing some of the powdered delatone with water. Then spread on the hairs and after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and all trace of hair have vanished. Its careful, however, to get real delatone.—Advertisement.

NUTRITION AND TASTE

By Brice Belden, M. D.

WHEN food is chewed it is also tasted. The nerves of taste recognise certain properties of the food and convey the "information" to centres in the brain whose function it is to signal the stomach, liver and other digestive organs to prepare for what ever work is in sore for them.

Tasting also controls nutrition by lessening the desire for various foods as the body receives a sufficiency of each dietic item.

The amount of gastric juice appearing in the stomach depends largely upon how long one chews food, and how thoroughly. If one retains the food for a long time and chews it well a proportionately large amount of gastric juice will be ready to digest the food when it reaches the gastric laboratory.

Now the soft palate is very sensitive to solid objects, and if food is imperfectly chewed the resulting irritation of coarse particles sets up a reverse movement which sends the food back between the teeth to be better masticated.

Easy For Thin People to Put on Flesh and Gain Weight

It's a mistake to think it's necessary for thin people to be scrawny. Quite the contrary, they can be put on plump and graceful, that one often wishes they were thin, but many people soon learn to prefer to be "all skin and bone," especially if it is easy to do so.

Physicians have long known that whoever could discover a remedy that would cause the fatty tissue of the body to plump and graceful, that one often wishes they were thin, but many people soon learn to prefer to be "all skin and bone," especially if it is easy to do so upon

FINANCE AND BUSINESS

By B. C. FORBES

Young John D. Rockefeller declared years ago that his father considered he had done more for the world by developing a vast, efficient, useful business organization, employing many thousands of workers at reasonable wages, than by any of his philanthropies.

I once put this question to a number of financial and industrial men of conspicuous achievement: What do you regard as the thing most worth while doing in this world. Nearly all replied in this tenor: "The building up of a great manufacturing business which provides employment to a great many men at wages sufficient to enable them to bring up families under decent conditions."

I recall that Frank A. Vanderlip cited the construction of a railroad through a section of the country needing a railroad as an ideal illustration of something worth doing, because such an enterprise added untold millions to the wealth of the farmers and the communities tapped by it, and enabled them to get into touch with the more abundant higher standard of civilization.

What is the right attitude toward giving away money, rather than what attitude to adopt toward business men who take toward it? Carnegie never would give a cent to a beggar because, as he said, he refused to employ any person to do that kind of work, begging. Over in Britain there is the tremendously successful business man who is commonly referred to as a wonderful philanthropist because of what he has done so much for his own work people and for the good of the market and for very long ago this man became interested in an island off the north of Scotland and addressed himself to the task of helping the inhabitants to throw off some of the handicaps which were severely in struggling to earn a living under chronically adverse conditions.

This man is Lord Leverhulme of Port Sunlight, the largest manufacturer of soap in the world, as well as the founder of many other enterprises. When on a recent visit to this country I asked him how his venture in the Island of Lewis was progressing; he indicated that he would prefer to wait longer before saying very much. A friend has just sent me a local newspaper containing the report of a speech Lord Leverhulme made the other day to those islanders. It is extraordinarily satisfactory the attitude taken by most of our own business giants regarding philanthropic work.

Lord Leverhulme related the story of two philanthropists and another man who hated philanthropists. He described how the philanthropists decided to investigate the condition of the less fortunate people among whom he had settled, and ask them knew nothing of business or how to get results, he set to organizing businesses which provide employment. He did so much for them as he even did town planning for Leeds, and left them to run their own affairs—they left they and he always remained. When he died his monstone was inscribed, "He was a great philanthropist."

The second philanthropist declared the first's methods, declared that it was totally wrong to help only fellowman to better his way of living if he did not wish to. So he organized no industries, but saved all his money and invested it in government and other safe securities and lived the life of a country gentleman. As he subscribed liberally to churches, hospitals, universities, and colleges, he also had a great tombstone erected which recorded all his virtues, and added, "He was a great philanthropist."

The third believed his fellowman was his own equal in every way, but often had not enough of the financial opportunity. He claimed fullest liberty for himself and contended fullest liberty for all others as well. Therefore he not others encroached on the liberty of their fellowman. He equally contended that he had a right to stand by and see people living in wrong conditions and not show them a better way. Therefore he tried to improve conditions of those with whom he came in contact. His wife giving every one fullest liberty to adopt or reject his methods. He was of that peculiar type of mind that said it was better to help others to help themselves to become self-supporting without coercion—or loss of even a fraction of the fullest and freest liberty than to be a philanthropist.

Freest possible liberty to all, he claimed liberty for himself to stop his business schemes for helping others to help themselves when he found that the people did not support him. If he was not doing good, helpful work, the people could show their disapproval—by withholding their support. He said every human being must learn the lesson of life for himself or herself—must make their own mistakes, gain their own experience. The only way to insure permanent improvement in the conditions of life was by means of freedom and liberty and self-help on the people. He carried out his ideals to the fullest extent, and when he died, over the simple headstone was placed the inscription:

"Here lies one who took his chances,
In the busy world of men and circumstances,
Fought and fell and fought again;
Won sometimes—but did no crouch
Lost sometimes—but did not whine;
Took his beating—but kept going,
Never let his courage fail;
He was faithful and generous,
Therefore loved and understood,
Took his fellow man and woman,
Whether good or—not so good;
Knew his spirit undiminished,
Never let down on a friend,
Played the game till it was finished—
Lived a sportsman to the end."

Give you sometimes had this thought, that business giants could commend themselves more to their fellow mortals if they exercised more generosity in the conducting of their businesses, in the making of their money, and kept more prominently in mind the doing of good as they went along than the mere rolling up of millions?

SHIFT IN TREND IN SECOND HOUR

Mexican Petroleum and Baldwin Are Leaders in the Upward Movement

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor.

Stocks were strong in New York at noon, rallying in the second hour. The upturn was led by Mexican Petroleum and Baldwin. Other issues to make good gains were American Locomotive, Bethlehem B, Crucible, Pan American, Atlantic Gulf, American Woolen, American Sugar, Corn Products, Tobacco Products, General Motors and Studebaker. At their highest they were up from one to more than three points. Trading was on a moderate volume, morning transactions aggregating about 200,000 shares. Call loans renewed at 5½ per cent.

In the foreign exchange market German marks advanced and demand sterling receded. Opening quotations were sterling 3.72⅜, off ⅝ francs, 4.9725, off .0125 lire, .0425 lu, unchanged; marks .009454, up .000234.

IRREGULAR AT OPENING.

At the opening the price movement was irregular, but the undertone was weak and recessions were the rule for a few minutes. Then the first sign of recovery there was a relapse and a number of issues sold below the initial prices. Most changes were small. The market acted as if traders had no conviction as to the probable course of the market and were waiting for something to develop. Bonds were irregular and showed no trend. Early trading was featureless.

BEARS TAKE HEART.

Bears displayed more confidence this morning as a result of the reaction which marked the first session of the week and the resumption of short selling was reflected after the close yesterday by the increased covering demand for stocks. But American Sugar, which opened at 1-32, was the only issue to command a premium, the preferred stock brought 5½ per cent, and railroads 4½. While the recent advance in securities inspired considerable interest on the part of the public, it is reported that but few outsiders have come into the market. Operations continue to be chiefly of a professional character. Investors are showing more interest in bonds than in stocks. The steadiness of railway shares is due to a considerable extent to belief that there will soon be favorable action by the senate on the funding bill for the relief of carriers. The money situation is more favorable at this time than was expected at the beginning of the month. The West is evidently able to finance the movement of crops without drawing much on the balances in Eastern banks. Between September 15, when a Federal tax instrument is due and $600,000,000 will be required to meet it, and the end of January the banks and notes, a lower call rate is likely.

More Demand for Steel

There is now more demand for steel products than for several months, according to trade reports. It is said that the United States Steel Corporation is now receiving orders that exceed its shipments in tonnage. It has not reported a gain in tonnage since July, 1920.

LITTLE CHANGE IN BOSTON MARKET

Price Movement Is Irregular During Forenoon; Curb List Grows Stronger

Many issues were unchanged when trading began on the Boston Exchange and this was true in the noon hour too. Of the balance the majority declined. At the best the list was irregular and most fluctuations were small. Trading had no breadth and local stocks got scant attention from commission house habitues. Eastern Steamship issues were unusually active and constituted the only feature. The common advanced 1¾ during the forenoon and the preferred 3. Edison went up 2 points. Largest losses were Mohawk and United Drug, a point each. American Woolen receded more than a point, but recovered part of the loss.

Practically higher issues included Calumet & Arizona, Copper Range, New Cornelia, Davis Daly, Libby, Atlantic Gulf, International Cement, American Sugar and U. S. Smelting. Among those to decline a little were North Butte, Hancock, Copper Range, Swift Interna-tional, Orpheum, National Leather, United Fruit and West End.

QUIET CURB SESSION.

It was a quiet session on the Curb and this market had an indefinite trend for a while. It grew stronger. Early leaders were Boston & Montana and Crystal. Both were strong. The end of the morning Boston & Montana had advanced 1 cent to 7¾ cents, Crystal 1 cents to 32 cents, Silver Reef half a cent to 2½ cents, Denbigh 2 cents to 8 cents and Colorado Extension 1 cent to 52 cents. Declines included Bagdad 1 cent to 14 cents, Imperial 1 cent to 7 cents and United Verde Extension ⅝ to 23¼. Alpha and Calumet & Arizona recovered losses and Rex Consolidated had lost its gain.

WATTERS RAPS CHANGE IN TARIFF

Fordney Bill Too Radical a Departure From Plan Now in Vogue

"Congress will be responsible for an increase in the cost of living, much litigation, and inconveniencing of business, if it passes the Fordney tariff bill, with the American valuation provisions in it," declared W. F. Watters, vice-president of the Jordan Marsh Company, who today declared himself in the fight to prevent "the iniquitous system from going into effect."

The bill has passed the House of Representatives and is now before the Senate, but influence is being brought to bear upon the Senate, particularly by retail merchants, to kill the American valuation provisions.

"The enactment into the Fordney bill, as it stands today," said Mr. Watters, "with the American valuation system as a part of it, will indubitably lead to much higher prices for all commodities, as a result of the non-competative conditions which will result for the domestic manufacturer. Even foreign goods, should any duties in, will cost a great deal more, in spite of the view held in many eminent quarters that duties are paid by the foreigner for the privilege of selling his goods here and do not fall upon the domestic consumer.

"It is now universally admitted that the cost of living is still very high and oppressive enough in this country; but here is the Fordney bill we have a measure in the whole tendency of which is to make prices still higher and limit the supply of goods by shutting out the possibility of obtaining merchandise from countries which must buy and sell and where merchandise can be purchased to advantage and without positive injury to the American people.

"The foreign exchanges are abstruse and technical; however, it is quite well established that the effect of any depreciation in the currency in any country is always to raise prices and cost of manufacture at home, thus preventing the undersel-ling of goods in foreign markets.

TOO RADICAL A CHANGE.

"To sum up our objections to the American valuation plan:

"It is too radical a change from the experience of past years with their accumulated knowledge and the thousands of precedents which constitute the guide for action today. Should this change be made a whole new fabric of procedure and court rulings would have to be built up.

"This would take many years, entail much litigation, crowd the courts and cost much money. Importers who are obliged to place orders for merchandise many months before date of delivery of same can have only a limite knowledge of the landing costs and must, in order to protect themselves, add a very wide margin of profit so as to be reasonably sure of covering all possible contingencies and still have some profit left for themselves.

"Result: Prices are higher than they ought to be."

NEWS AND GOSSIP OF MOTION PICTURE WORLD

By FRIEDA DAVIS

By FRIEDA DAVIS

IT wasn't hard to recognize "Our Mary" and "Doug" when they came to the dinner at the Brunswick before the opening of "The Three Musketeers" on Sunday night. The same curls we see on the screen, the same demure manner, the same big blue eyes, and the same confiding smile typify Miss Pickford in real life, while Fairbanks is the same irrepressible, magnetic and energetic person as D' Artagnan.

"We're having a wonderful time going about the country seeing how people like Douglas' picture," Miss Pickford said. "The performances have been eye-openers, let me tell you, for we see what the people want and how glad they are to get it. When you actually see the audiences receiving the films you've been working weeks and months on you begin to realize what is on the other side of the camera from you on the 'set.' We're going back to New York for the opening of my picture, 'Little Lord Fauntleroy,' in a few days and then abroad for the openings of the 'Musketeers' in London and Paris."

Then nothing more would they say about business. The rest of the dinner was taken up in telling tales of California.

"Oh, it's still pretty wild and woolly!" Doug hastened to assure us. "Why, a little while ago I went off on a hunting party—not so far from Hollywood either —and we ran into nothing but mountain lions and rattlesnakes. In fact," he chuckled reminiscently, "we left word for our valet to wait for us in a certain place and to pitch camp there. We were several days late and when we finally found him he was cooly waiting for us in a den of rattlers. Why, I must have been five or six around him! Oh, no, he didn't know it. That's why he was there. You should have seen him when he found it out!"

"And the Douglas Douglas," Miss Pickford prompted him. "Why, you know, she turned an earnest face with her wide-open eyes, "I go home from the studio every night in terror. You should see me hide my pearls as we leave!"

"Yes, you should." "Doug" broke in, "just where the first gunman would look!"

"That's so," Mary agreed, giggling, "but anyway, I feel safe about it. Three and four cars are stolen every night in Hollywood. The robbers hold up the cars outside the city and march the people off down the road, then go off with the car. I'm terrified. Whenever I come home alone I just 'scorch' along. Nobody ever stops to pick dallies by the wayside!"

"Yeh!" Doug said. "Wait till they stop me. They'll show me up! I play in a picture and beat up half a dozen chaps at once, then some lone robber may come along and 'do me up.' Great fanstuff! Ha!"

"That's one of the funny things about Hollywood. You can ride along the boulevard and see fights every day. You can see holdups and all sorts of weird things happening. And what difference does it make to the Hollywood populace? They think it's just movies. Of course, that's what it is—but suppose some day it isn't!"

"Like that bank robbery, Mary, do you remember?"

"Oh, yes. They set up a camera in front of a bank and started cranking while a man walked in, gagged the men inside and walked out again with all the money. Meanwhile the policemen were outside helping keep back the crowd so their would-be murderers for the picture! The two men took down the camera, climber into a car and drove off!"

"Oh, the West is still 'wild and woolly,' believe that!" Doug chortled.

"What's the next thing on our program? Well, first of all we're going abroad. We sail on the Olympic a week from next Saturday. When we get back to Hollywood Douglas will start right in on 'The Virginian.' I don't know what I'll do," Mary looked disconsolate at the thought of not going right back to work. "I have some stories but none of them seem quite suitable. There's one—but it requires New York settings and they're so hard and expensive to build out home. They're not really satisfying either."

"Why not make them in New York?" was offered as a suggestion.

Mary's eyes opened wide with amazement and reproach.

"Why, because Douglas will be working in the West. I couldn't leave him, you know. No, I'll just wait and read until I find something absolutely right. I believe it's better to make one really good production than three or four mediocre ones.

"I get lots of letters from fans asking me to 'grow up.' I've no objection but I can't find a good grown-up story for my type. After all, I think I much prefer children's parts. My favorite, by the way, is 'Stella Maris.' I thoroughly enjoyed every minute I spent on it. And too, 'Tess of the Storm Country' is a favorite. I'm going to do that over again, by the way, some time. It's been, let me—eh, no, seven years since I made it."

Seven years! Everyone looked startled. Seeing Mary the other night, one thought of her as learning her multiplication table seven years ago. She looked calmly back at us.

"Well, what's the matter with that," she demanded. "I'm twenty-seven now. I was playing the mother of a nine-year-old child in a picture then! I love 'Tess' and I'm looking forward to do her again. And meanwhile, I shan't grow up!"

You Must Do Your Own Climbing

The Steps Are High and Broad, and the Climb Is a Long One—to REAL SUCCESS

Copyright, 1921, Star Company

This is the country of success and we hear endless talk about it.

These talks vary from simple advice concerning a man like Lincoln, who had only a few books and a few chances, but made the best use of them he could, all the way up to the complicated recipes for succeeding that are given out by the gentlemen of the insurance companies and the get-rich schemes.

This newspaper has discussed success often, yet it takes the subject up again today, for the young men among our readers, and the young women as well, are willing constantly for advice or for suggestions.

Certain men whom we call successful by which we mean that they have got MONEY, have "succeeded" without the quality of industry. They are the gamblers, the Wall Street geniuses, or others who with tricks have got the better of their fellowmen, BUT THEY ARE NOT SUCCESSFUL.

Men of the same stamp have succeeded, even without sobriety or honesty.

But even such success as theirs demands certain qualities. They must know how to hold themselves back, husband their resources, keep themselves in hand until they shall have achieved the particular object or the particular sum which they have in mind.

To tell a young man that he NEEDS certain qualities is wasting his time and your own—except as you may direct his attention TO THE POSSIBILITY OF DEVELOPING IN HIMSELF the essentials of success.

Collis P. Huntington, asked to advise a young man, said: "Take $10,000 and go into the business of raising rubber trees." The young man didn't have $10,000.

Mr. Huntington said: "Well, go and get it before you come to me for advice."

The great railroad man's attitude is very much like that of the ORDINARY adviser of the young. He says, "Be honest, be industrious, be self-denying, be courageous, patient, sober"—but he does not tell him how he CAN BE these things.

To make a real success you must have, first of all, INDUSTRY—the faculty of hard work. AND YOU CAN CULTIVATE THAT QUALITY IN YOURSELF.

Map out what you are going to do each day, AND DO IT. Never let yourself get into the habit of leaving a thing UNFINISHED. It is hard; for some time it is almost impossible. But if you WILL IT, you can make yourself a hard worker eventually. You must do that—that is the FIRST step to the real success.

SELF-DENIAL is especially a matter of self-education.

Instead of putting your mind on the question, "How can I amuse myself or dress myself?" say to yourself, "WHAT CAN I DO WITHOUT?"

Self-denial is not important simply because it saves your money—it is especially important because IT SAVES YOUR TIME AND YOUR VITALTY. Sobriety is, of course, a part of self-denial. If you don't smoke excessively, or at all, if you don't drink excessively or at all—you save money and you save vitality. If you don't pay foolish attention to dress—only neatness and common sense are necessary to success—you save the time and the thought that many men put on worthless worrying about their personal appearance.

The most important in the line of self-denial perhaps is TO MAKE YOURSELF NOT WORRY ABOUT WHAT OTHERS THINK OF YOU. Try to earn the approval of those who are worth while, and dismiss from your mind the opinion of the crowd that means nothing to you and can do nothing for you. More men waste time and energy and worry on the opinions of others than would make them successful if they could be indifferent to public opinion.

Unfortunately, enthusiasm is one of the qualities most difficult to cultivate. It is almost a part of a man's own self, like his dark hair or regular features, or wide shoulders. Yet even enthusiasm CAN be cultivated, and it should be cultivated. Begin by getting out of your mind the critical, complaining, dissatisfied feelings. That is like pulling the weeds out of a field.

If you can get out of your own brain the foolish feeling of complaint, of mortified vanity, you will be clearing the field for enthusiasm to grow.

Enthusiasm is largely a matter of vitality, health and strength.

Get up in the morning after eight hours' good sleep, and you will be enthusiastic—ready to attack any proposition. Get up with five hours' sleep and a night foolishly spent, and you will have no strength for enthusiasm. Cultivate your strength, save it, and train yourself to look enthusiastically and hopefully at the world, scorning its difficulties.

Honesty has been talked of incessantly ever since the writing of the Ten Commandments, and long before. There are many false reputations, and not a few big fortunes, built ON DISHONESTY. There are some men who might have been rich if they had been dishonest, but who are poor now. But be sure that REAL success comes only to the honest man, to the man who thinks and works AND TREATS OTHER MEN HONESTLY.

Whatever you do HAS GOT TO BE DONE ABSOLUTELY BY THE EXERCISE OF YOUR OWN WILL POWER; IF YOU DECEIVE YOURSELF BLAMING OTHERS INSTEAD OF YOURSELF, YOU WILL NEVER GET AHEAD. YOU MUST BE YOUR OWN MOST SEVERE JUDGE. Remember that it is not sufficient to WISH for success or to ADMIRE the qualities that make success. You must develop those qualities and use them.

There is one feature of real success about which we shall say little. That is UNSELFISHNESS. It is the greatest, highest quality of all—although the usual talkers on success do not mention it. Unselfishness enters into our modern calculations but little. Yet, any man who would be truly great in his achievements must have for inspiration an unselfish desire to be of use to other men. He may pile up millions, but he will not be one of the world's really great men unless guided by the consciousness that a man's first duty and last duty is to try to make others better off and happier for his having lived on the earth.

SEAMEN WARNED AGAINST IMPOSTORS

Swindlers, Who Falsely Claim to Represent Thriving New Association Formed by Nellie Bly, Found Operating in Number of Coast Cities

By Nellie Bly

SUCCESS breeds imitators and enemies.

It arouses among low people the mean qualities of jealousy and corruption.

Because the American Seamen's Association, composed of native-born seamen, has grown miraculously to over 20,000 members in less than three and a half months, swindlers are attempting to form other associations claiming they are branches of this one. They are all impostors. Their object is graft, to get money out of the American seamen, for which they can give no return.

One man has been so bold as to attempt to launch an association in New York with the pretense that for certain fees he will obtain employment for his victims. He even pretends that he represents the American Seamen's Association. He has endeavored to procure the support of some persons as unscrupulous as himself. But the law will make his course a short one.

Swindle Seamen

The same thing has happened in Norfolk, where the person not only represented himself to his victims as being an agent of this association, but wrote to different steamship companies stating that he was forming a branch of this association and soliciting aid for his members. He will also be proceeded against.

Another impostor made his appearance in Jacksonville, Fla. He not only represented himself as an agent of this association, intrusted with the formation of a branch, but pretended he had been a writer for the "New York Evening American." This alone branded him as an impostor, as such a publication does not exist. He wrote articles about himself and claimed that the New York office of the American Seamen's Association would procure employment for all members joining at that point.

Large sums of money were collected from unsuspecting victims. But when I notified them that the man was a swindler he had already gone elsewhere, and his address was unknown.

In Buffalo, as well as on the West coast, other fake branches were started, the victims paying $35 for membership and $15 a year for dues.

Native-born American seamen are warned against these swindlers and money-getters. The American Seaman's Association has no branches. None will be formed until I form them myself personally. This association has no delegates. It is not a union. It is purely a social and fraternal organization. It is formed for the express purpose of manning vessels floating the American flag with American seamen. Its motto is: "American seamen for American ships." It is not a money-making or a money-getting organization. Its initiation fee is $1; dues, $2 a year.

Native born American seamen wherever located are cordially invited to join. They can send by registered mail their birth certificates, passports, ratings and discharges. And if they can afford it, the initiation fee and dues. They should enclose self-addressed and stamped envelopes for replies. All letters should be addressed as follows:

"NELLIE BLY, President
American Seaman's Association,
Room 2169 Hotel McAlpin,
New York."

We are meeting with great success in placing American seamen on American ships. Encouraged by the strength of our Association, masters, mates, chief engineers and chief stewards, where American born, are seeking for American crews. Heretofore such officers, though desiring to employ their native men, did not dare express the wish for fear of losing their own positions. They had to bear in silence the knowledge that their lives were in constant jeopardy from alien crews.

More than one American officer has been killed. More than one American seaman has been murdered. But such affairs are always smoothed over in a few words, and then the murder is forgotten.

Passengers Are Not Safe

But it is a crime that Americans should have their lives endangered at sea by murderous aliens to whom human life is worth nothing. It is a greater crime to allow passenger vessels to be manned by alien crews, endangering the lives of the passengers.

What chance would there be for saving women and children with this unruly mob in case of an accident at sea? Little do passengers realize, when boarding a ship whose crew is alien, how they are risking their lives and property.

For the safety of our people in times of peace and for the safety of our country in times of war, it is necessary and imperative not only that American seamen shall man American ships, but that these American seamen shall all wear the same uniform. It should be compulsory that all ships flying the American flag should adopt and use the same uniform, and that this uniform should be recognised by the Government in case of war.

All ships should be chartered "bareboat" to the shipping lines, but with a clause that the charter will be cancelled unless the ships are manned exclusively by Americans.

The shipowners themselves are coming around to this way of thinking. Their eyes have been shut in the past by the arguments of their alien port stewards, marine superintendents and similar officials entrusted with the employment of men. They are realizing now that alien crews are dangerous and expensive. They are not yet convinced of their ability to secure native born crews, efficient, reliable and capable, but our association has proved that this can be done. It offers to every shipping company qualified Americans, sober, reliable, honest, trustworthy and efficient, the high class American that is a pride and an honor to our country. And this association can fill every department, from the deck down. It holds itself responsible for the conduct of its members while at sea. A member who drinks or in any other manner brings discredit either by work or conduct upon the American name is expelled from the association. This results in making the standard of our members very high.

Only a few days ago a Government vessel had to send an S. O. S. for aid. There was rioting aboard. The Limers had been trying to murder other aliens in the crew. The captain was helpless and had to call, by radio, an armored cruiser to his aid.

The Shipping Board vessel, which docked just about the same time, had been robbed of $10,000. This was again a case of a mixed crew of aliens. Hundreds of cases, which never reach the public print, are reported.

There is only one remedy, and that lies in manning the ships with Americans only, men who have the same ideals, the same language and the same principles. Then and then only will ships be run economically and efficiently, safely and successfully.

The United States Shipping Board, in going over expenses, should be compelled to eliminate that very high expense of keeping up sea service bureaus. The Shipping Board has refused to eliminate aliens from these bureaus, which are maintained on the money of American citizens. It is a wrong to every American that he shall be taxed so that the Shipping Board may maintain offices for giving employment to aliens.

The Shipping Board insists upon its rights under the charters given to shipping companies to man the ships. They invariably send on board mixed crews. There are instances where the shipping lines want to man their ships with Americans, and would do so, had they the privilege.

These Sea Service Bureaus are kept up at an enormous expense. They are not needed. They are an obstacle in the way of manning ships by 100 per cent. Americans. They are using American money to find jobs for foreigners. They should be closed immediately, their high-priced employes dismissed, their expensive quarters vacated, and this vast sum spared the government.

No one needs to believe that the government must support a bureau to supply seamen. This condition was a war condition only. It ceased to exist at the signing of the Armistice. Today there are hundreds of thousands of seamen in every port flocking to every pier, begging for employment. There is an enormous surplus instead of a scarcity of qualified seamen. And the Sea Service Employment Bureaus in every port should be instantly abandoned, and that enormous expenditure cut off.

Nor is it necessary today, or will it ever be again, for American shipping companies to pay for their men. The day for the alien boarding house keeper to swindle seamen and get pay from shippers for producing them is at an end. No seaman need pay for a job today. No shipping company need pay for a seaman. They need not have the expense of offices to supply seamen. They can secure all the men they need from the Seamen's Association free of cost.

WINIFRED BLACK ON MISS OF 1921

WELL, well, girls—so you're checking your corsets in the dressing room when you go to the dance, and you're wearing bobbed hair because you want to look like a circus girl, and you're seriously thinking of flaying grandma's hoopskirts out of the garret and making them the fashion again!

What interesting things we do read in some newspapers.

I wonder who writes them.

Listen, gentlemen—corsets have been out of fashion for goodness knows how long. Few girls with any remnant of a figure think of wearing a corset, and haven't since it became the mode to look like an invertabrate animal.

Relics of Other Days

You can't tie yourself into a hard knot with a pair of corsets on. You can be lithesome and graceful and twiny and twisty and sloppy and slimpsy in the average corset—no, you cannot, no matter how hard you try. Sarah Bernhardt knew that years ago, and so did Nazimova, who came after her.

Corsets were all right for the prunes and prisms girl. They were all right for the woman with the old-fashioned figure—but how many young women are wearing corsets these days? So how in the world can they check them if they want to?

Old ladies wear them, of course. They're so used to them they can't get along without them. They are like the cab horse who had to keep going all the time because the only thing that held him on his feet was the sense of the shafts on either side of him.

Fat women wear them, of course—poor creatures! Women who don't want to be fat have to do—oh, lots of things.

Twenty years ago every woman who hadn't what was technically known as a "figure" wore crinoline and cotton batting to make people think that she weighed at least thirty pounds more than she did.

Today that same woman pays a dressmaker outrageous prices to try to make her look as if she weighed fifty pounds less than she does. And as for hoop-skirts—it is to laugh.

Fancy tennis in a hoop-skirt, or golf or horseback riding—though my grandmother did use to tell me how gracefully she looped her hoops over the pommel of the saddle. Fancy dancing in a hoop-skirt, or rowing or hiking!

No, no, gentlemen, if you're going to try to put us into hoop-skirts again, you'll have to raise an entirely new breed of girls. Hoop-skirts go with fancy-work and fainting spells, and self-conscious blushes and the poems of Mr. Tupper. They never, never would fit into the modern scheme of life.

Hoop Skirts? Never!

Grandma was a darling. Sometimes I really think I liked grandma's kind of girl better than I like the new kind. She was kinder, it seems to me, and more gentle and more self-sacrificing and more attractive, and the great compensation of grandmother's day was that she must have been able to tell one kind of woman from another just by looking at her.

Today they all look so much alike it's rather difficult.

Pluck Mamie's eyebrows and plaster her face and pull her hair down over her ears, and yank a hat down over her nose so far that it almost rests on her shoulders in the back, dress her in a little doll's frock of lace and clinging silk, put a pair of high-heeled toddles on her feet—and she'll look so much like Kitty and Dolly, and Genevieve and Violet that you can't possibly tell them apart unless you know them all very well indeed.

But Mamie's all right. She's the girl of the period, and the period wants her to be the kind of girl she is. And she belongs to 1921, just as the airplane does and the racing roadster and the wireless telegraph.

Imagine Mamie in a corset and a hoop-skirt! How hard it must be to find something to write about these days when such wild canards get into some newspaper.

DO NOT BE STUPID IF YOU CAN HELP IT

By Dr. Charles Fleischer

AGAINST stupidity the gods themselves are helpless.

That was an old Latin proverb. But it is a fair guess that God Himself is no more potent against really willful stupidity, particularly in our days.

Perhaps, it is just as well not to be too unsympathetic on this score. Regarding this defect, we may justly quote the familiar story of the Quaker couple, who agreed that the whole world was rather queer—all save thee and me—and sometimes I think even thee art a little bit odd!"

Yes, stupidity is fairly a universal failing—in all except this writer, and you, the clever reader—and sometimes even the writer has occasion to accuse himself of stupidity!

Which reminds him of a personal experience with the departed Edward Everett Hale. We were waiting to address a gathering in Boston's Faneuil Hall—to give that famous Cradle of Liberty one of its periodical rockings—when dear old Dr. Hale turned towards him with the anecdotal look in his eye, and said:

"Fleischer, do you know what was my first lecture experience?"

"No, Dr. Hale, what was it?"

"Well, I travelled all over the West, giving a lecture on "Sleep"—with illustrations by the audience."

Quite as confidently one may write an essay on Stupidity, and take for granted that every reader can easily illustrate the article—at least with recollections of the conduct of others!

A Crime Or a Vice?

What is stupidity? And why were the Latins so desperate about it?

Is stupidity a crime, or a vice, or just a misfortune?

Of course, it is not a crime, though many crimes are committed in sheer stupidity. And it is not a vice, because it lacks the willing and deliberate quality of vice.

Stupidity is rarely even a fault. It is merely a misfortune, against which neither gods nor men can readily take guard.

Stupidity is quite incalculable, cannot be foretold, is a matter of chance, and, therefore, the gods themselves are helpless against it, since—according to ancient belief—Chance and Fate are above the gods.

To talk again in modern terms, without further needless analysis, a bit more practically and without personal application, let us ask the double-headed question: Why be stupid—can't you help it?

We are beginning to reap some of the fruits of democracy. One of these is a finer self-respect. Therefore, we are not so prone, as were the ancients, to admit "helplessness" as an insurmountable fact.

Indeed, we are more likely to condemn than to condone a quality or a defect which shifts the burden of responsibility by making an ally of helplessness.

We have, as a nation, destroyed the lottery business, because we recognized the mischief-breeding, demoralizing influence of an institution which got us much into the habit of worshipping Luck, instead of being the makers of their own good fortune.

We believe in every one's working for what he wants, and paying the price of personal effort for every desirable achievement.

For a Square Deal

We believe not only in giving the devil his due, but in giving to every person a square deal and the recognition and reward to which he is entitled.

Therefore, however much we may sympathize with the habitually or temperamentally stupid person (perhaps, because of a touch of fellow-feeling) we are likely to attribute his failure to his failing.

And when we find ourselves guilty of stupidity, the same democratic standard of high expectancy makes us reproach ourselves, rather than blame other or rail at circumstances.

Stupidity commonly is ignorance; either general unintelligence and unawakedness, or ignorance of particular facts in a given situation.

The alert democracy of our day, while it expects perfect wisdom of no one, is unwilling to accept ignorance, and rightly refuses to put a premium on stupidity.

You will find that it pays you to get rid of all the stupidity in your make-up. When you have done or said the stupid thing, reprove yourself for it.

The beginning of the cure is the frank recognition and disapproval of stupidity as a remediable defect.

In honest shame is the way to wisdom, whether of mind or of character.

We can make grammar conquest of stupidity by refusing it a place in our conduct of our makeup.

However reluctantly or slowly, it will give way to alertness.
